Injunction against a person not a party to the suit—No injunction can be granted under this rule against a person who is not a party to the suit (o)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order refusing as well as from one granting a temporary injunction (p). An appeal also lies from an order purporting to be made under this rule though not warranted by it (q). Sec O 43 r 1 cl (r)

Revision—No appeal lies to the High Court from an order made by the lower Appellate Court under this rule [s 104 sub s (2)]. In two recent cases where a temporary injunction was refused by the lower Appellate Court the High Court of Calcutta without deciding whether it has power to revise the order made an order granting an injunction in the exercise of powers conferred upon High Courts by s. 15 of the Charter Act (r)

Breach—Disobedience of an injunction can be punished by the High Court as a contempt of Court (s)

Power of Chartered High Courts to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in another Court—As regards Chartered High Courts it has been held that the powers of these Courts to grant an injunction are not confined to the terms of rules 1 and 2 of this Order. A carrying on business at D sues B in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of D to recover from B a sum of Rs 1 100 as balance due to him in respect of certain goods sent by him from D to B in Calcutta for sale as commission agent. B then sues A in the High Court of Calcutta to recover from A a sum of Rs 2 300 as balance due to him in respect of the same transactions and applies to the High Court of Calcutta for a temporary injunction to restrain A from proceeding with the suit in the Court at D until the disposal of the suit in the High Court. It is clear that this case is not covered either by r 1 or r 2 of this Order. Has the High Court power to grant the injunction? It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the powers of High Court to grant a temporary injunction are not confined to the terms of rr 1 and 2 and that these Courts have inherent power under their general equity jurisdiction to grant such an injunction independently of the provisions of the Code and also that such power can be exercised by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court (t). The same view has been recently taken by the High Court of Bombay but the injunction granted in that case was rather peculiar in form namely that A should be restrained from proceeding with the suit in the Court of the subordinate Judge at D in such a way as to delay or embarrass the trial of the suit in the High Court (u). The Calcutta decision however are not uniform as to whether this power can be exercised if A is not resident within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court for Sale J held that the power can be exercised even if A did not reside within the limits of the jurisdiction (v) while Fletcher J (w) and Stephen J (x) held that it cannot be exercised unless A resided within those limits. The point arose in a Bombay case but it was there held that as A had been served and had appeared in the suit without protest he must be deemed to have submitted to the jurisdiction of the Bombay Court and the Court had therefore power to grant the injunction (y) so also in a Patna case (z)

The High Court of Bombay has also held that it has inherent power to restrain by injunction a defendant in a suit in the High Court from proceeding with a suit filed by him in the Small Causes Court at Bombay referring to the same matter (a)

The next question to consider is whether the power of a Chartered High Court to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in another Court is confined to suits pending in a Court subordinate thereto or whether it extends to suits pending in any Court in British India. In one of the cases cited above (b) the High Court of Calcutta made an order restraining a party from proceeding with a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly a Court subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad. In a recent Bombay case Macleod J. expressed the opinion that though the High Court has power to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in a Court subordinate to it it has no such power in respect of a suit pending in a Court not subordinate to it (c). In support of the above view the learned Judge relied on the provisions of s. 56 cl. (b) of the Specific Relief Act 1877 by which it is enacted that an injunction cannot be granted to stay proceedings in a Court not subordinate to that from which the injunction is sought.

A further question that arises in this connection is whether a British Indian Court has power to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in a Court of a Native State. It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that it has if there was a real hardship on the party before it or something vexatious or oppressive (d). The Calcutta High Court will grant such an injunction if applied for promptly and before time and trouble has been expended in the foreign suit (e). In England an injunction is granted to stay an action commenced in a foreign jurisdiction only if the applicant proves a substantial case of vexation resulting from the identity of proceedings remedies and benefits or from the existence of some motive other than a bona fide desire to determine disputes (f).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order of a High Court refusing to restrain a defendant from prosecuting his suit in another Court. Such an order is not appealable under the Code. Nor is it a judgment within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter (g).

Power of High Court to stay proceedings pending in a subordinate Court—The preceding paragraph refers to the power of a Chartered High Court to restrain a party to a suit pending before it from proceeding with a suit pending in another Court. The question now to be considered is whether a Chartered High Court has power in a suit pending before it to issue a prohibition to a subordinate Court to refrain from proceeding with a suit pending before the latter Court and if so whether that power can be exercised by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court. It has been held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court that a Chartered High Court has power to make an order directing a Subordinate Court not to proceed further with a suit pending in the latter Court but that such an order appertains to the Appellate and not to the Original Side of the High Court and that it can therefore only be made by those Judges to whom the Appellate Side work so assigned by Rules made under sec. 13 of the Charter Act that is by a Division Court consisting of two Judges and that it cannot be made by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court (h). In the case cited above an order was made by Macleod J. in a suit pending before him staying a suit pending in the Ratnagiri Court. It was assumed by a majority of the Full Bench that such an order was a prohibition to the Ratnagiri Court and not merely to the parties from proceeding with the suit in that Court and it was held that Macleod J. had no jurisdiction to make the order. On the other hand Macleod J. who was one of the Judges constituting the Full Bench declined to read his order as a direct prohibition to the Ratnagiri Court and held that a single Judge sitting on the Original Side was competent to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mufassal and so in effect stay the proceedings within the meaning of sec 56 cl (b) referred to above. As to transfer of suits from Presidency Small Cause Courts to High Court see notes to cl 13 of the Letters Patent.

This rule does not apply to probate proceedings—An injunction cannot be granted under this rule in a probate proceeding. The reason is that the only question in controversy in such a proceeding is that of representation of the estate of the deceased there is no question of title in such a proceeding and it cannot therefore be said that there is any property in dispute in such a proceeding as contemplated by this rule. If the Court is satisfied that the estate of the deceased is in danger of being wasted or wrongfully alienated it may appoint an administrator pendente lite and it may also make an order under r 7 below, but it cannot grant an injunction under this rule (i).

Form—For form of temporary injunction see App F form no 8

2 [S 493] (1) In any suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind, whether compensation is claimed in the suit or not, the plaintiff may, at any time after the commencement of the suit, and either before or after judgment, apply to the Court for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from committing the breach of contract or injury complained of, or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right

Injunction to restrain repetition or continuance of breach

(2) The Court may by order grant such injunction, on such terms as to the duration of the injunction, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit

(3) In case of disobedience, or of breach of any such terms, the Court granting an injunction may order the property of the person guilty of such disobedience or breach to be attached, and may also order such person to be detained in the civil prison for a term not exceeding six months, unless in the meantime the Court directs his release

(4) No attachment under this rule shall remain in force for more than one year, at the end of which time if the disobedience or breach continues, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award such compensation as it thinks fit, and shall pay the balance, if any, to the party entitled thereto

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The words of any kind after the word injury in sub r (1) are new See notes below under the head Scope of the rule
- 2 The words unless in the meantime the Court directs his release in sub r (3) are also new See in this connection the undermentioned case (j)

Scope of the rule—Rule 1 enables the Court to grant temporary injunctions in the cases specified in cls (a) and (b) thereof The present rule enables the Court to grant temporary injunctions to restrain a defendant from committing the breach of a contract or other injury of any kind The words of any kind are new They have been added to supersede an Allahabad decision where it was held that the words other injury in the old section did not include acts of trespass upon property (k) Such acts are now within this rule In a Bombay case a lessee sought to execute a decree to evict his sub lessee But at the date of the decree the term of the head lease had expired and the head lessor sued to restrain the lessee from taking possession Macleod C J held that neither rule 1 nor rule 2 applied (l) A Court hearing an election petition under rules framed under the Madras District Municipalities Act cannot grant a temporary injunction restraining the candidate from taking his seat (m)

Principles governing temporary injunction to restrain breach of contract —

Temporary injunctions to restrain the breach of a contract are regulated by the present rule Perpetual injunctions to restrain the breach of a contract are regulated by the Specific Relief Act 1877 s 56 cl (f) and s 57 Section 56 cl (f) of the Specific Relief Act provides that a perpetual injunction cannot be granted to prevent the breach of a contract the performance of which would not be specifically enforced Now the performance of a contract is not specifically enforced where damages would afford adequate relief Hence no injunction can be granted where damages afford adequate relief

The very first principle of injunction law is that you do not obtain injunctions for actionable wrongs [or for breach of contracts] for which damages are the proper remedy (n) In the Bombay case of Nusserwanji v Gordon (o) Sir Charles Sargent said that the issue of a temporary injunction is governed by the same principles as the granting of a permanent injunction at the trial of a case Referring to these observations Sir Arnold White in a Madras case said Now having regard to the fact that the law with regard to the granting of a perpetual injunction is to be found in the Specific Relief Act and is laid down with great precision and that the law with regard to the granting of a temporary injunction is to be found in the Code of Civil Procedure and is declared to be a matter for discretion if it were necessary to consider the point I am not sure I should be prepared to go quite so far as Sir Charles Sargent (p) However that may be the following two rules seem to govern all cases on the subject now under consideration —

- 1 If a suit is brought for specific performance of a contract and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a breach of the contract and the plaintiff applies for a temporary injunction to prevent the breach of the contract until the suit is disposed of the Court will decline to grant a temporary injunction if the plaintiff and the affidavits filed by the parties show on the face of them that the case is not one for a perpetual injunction or for specific performance. The refusal of the application for a temporary injunction in (1) Bhikaji v Bapu Saju (q) (2) Haji Abdul v Haji Abdul (r) (3) Nusserwanji v Gordon (s) (4) Assur v Ratanbhai (t) and (5) In the matter of Ganpat Narain (u) may be referred to this rule. In the first case the suit was by an association of artisans consisting of 57 members for an injunction against one of them to restrain him from committing the breach of a contract which provided that all the members of the association should bring the business of working and carving in wood into one shop and should divide the profits among them and that no member should take any order on his own account. The plaintiffs applied for a temporary injunction against the defendant to prevent the breach of the contract until the disposal of the suit but the injunction was refused for the agreement being on the face of it illegal (as the association though it consisted of 57 members was not registered as a Company) no specific performance or injunction could be granted. In the second case the suit was for a perpetual injunction to prevent the breach of an agreement for a charter party. The Court refused to grant a temporary injunction to restrain the breach on the ground that a perpetual injunction could not be granted to restrain the breach of such an agreement though a perpetual injunction might be granted to prevent the breach of an actually completed charter party. In the third case an application for a temporary injunction was made by the agents of a company as plaintiffs to restrain the company from employing a firm of solicitors in contravention of an agreement between the company and the agents whereby the plaintiff's firm were appointed agents of the company for 25 years and the agents were empowered to employ solicitors for the company during that period. The Court refused the application on the ground that since a perpetual injunction could not be granted to restrain the company from employing persons other than the plaintiff's firm as agents of the company a temporary injunction should not be granted to restrain the company from employing solicitors other than those of the plaintiff's choice. In the fourth case the Court refused to grant a temporary injunction to restrain a Hindu widow from adopting a son in breach of an agreement entered into by her not to adopt a son. The order of refusal was based on the ground that the Court could not grant a perpetual injunction to prevent the breach of such a contract. In the last of the cases cited above the parties were Hindus and the suit was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for specific performance of a contract whereby the defendant agreed to give his minor daughter in marriage to the plaintiff. The plaintiff applied for an interim injunction to restrain the defendant from giving away the girl in marriage to another person but the application was refused on the ground that the contract was not one of which specific performance could be enforced or the breach of which could be restrained by a perpetual injunction.

2 The converse of rule (1) is not always true that is the Court will not grant a temporary injunction before the hearing in every case where a perpetual injunction might fitly be granted at the hearing for to justify a temporary injunction not only must the case be such that an injunction is the appropriate relief but there must be the further ingredient that unless the defendant is restrained forthwith by a temporary injunction irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit is decided upon its merits (v). But if a case is a proper one for specific performance and irreparable injury is likely to be caused to the plaintiff unless the breach of the contract is forthwith restrained the Court will grant a temporary injunction to restrain the breach of the contract. Thus where A sued B for specific performance of a contract whereby in consideration of A having advanced money to B to working certain mica mines B had agreed to deliver all the mica produced from the mines to A and not to deliver any portion thereof to any other person and also sued for an injunction to restrain the breach of this agreement and in the suit applied for a temporary injunction to restrain B from delivering any portion of the mica to another firm to whom B had arranged in breach of his contract to consign a portion the Court held that the case was a fit one for a temporary injunction and the injunction was granted (w) But if the existence of the contract itself is denied no temporary injunction can be granted (x)

Sub rule (3) —The powers conferred by this sub rule can only be exercised if the Court is set in motion by a party who deems himself aggrieved hence where a District Court committed a defendant to jail of its own motion for disobeying an injunction of the Court it was held that the order of committal was ultra vires Note however that a High Court has inherent power to commit a defaulting party for contempt hence a High Court can commit a defendant to jail of its own motion for disobeying an injunction issued by such Court (y) See sec 151 above

Under sub r (3) the Court can in its discretion order either arrest or attachment of property it is not bound in the first instance to make an order of attachment and then order imprisonment ( ) There is no foundation for the proposition that the Court can only make an order of imprisonment after an order of attachment Persons who abet disobedience of an injunction cannot be punished under this rule (a)

If the application to commit was made while the suit was pending the fact that the order on the application was made after the suit was dismissed does not affect the powers of the Court to take action for disobedience to the injunction (b)

A Court to which the business of the Court granting the injunction is transferred can exercise powers of punishment under this sub rule (c)

Temporary mandatory injunction—The Courts in England have the power to grant mandatory injunctions on interlocutory applications (d) And so have Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction (e) The same power is possessed by Courts in the mofussil (f)

Appeal—An appeal lies under O 43 r 1 (r) from an order declining to order arrest or attachment of property for disobedience of an interlocutory injunction granted under this rule and the Appellate Court may on appeal pass the order which the lower Court should have passed (g)

3 [S 494] The Court shall in all cases, except where it appears that the object of granting the injunction would be defeated by the delay, before granting an injunction, direct notice of the application for the same to be given to the opposite party

ORDER XL

Appointment of Receivers

Appointment of Receivers 1 [S 503] (1) Where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient, the Court may by order—

- (a) appoint a receiver of any property, whether before or after decree,
- (b) remove any person from the possession or custody of the property,
- (c) commit the same to the possession, custody or management of the receiver, and
- (d) confer upon the receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realisation, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of documents as the owner himself has, or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit

(2) Nothing in this rule shall authorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove

Alterations in the rule—

- 1 The words to be just and convenient have been substituted for the words to be necessary for the realization preservation or better custody or management of any property movable or immovable the subject of a suit or attachment The effect of this amendment is that the Court may now appoint a receiver not only in the particular cases specified in the old section but in every case in which it appears to the Court to be just and convenient to do so Thus a receiver may be appointed in a suit for partition (j) See notes below under the head Just and convenient As to execution of decrees by appointment of a receiver see s 51 cl (d)
- 2 The words whether before or after decree in cl (a) are new They give effect to the undermentioned decision under the old section (l)
- 3 The words subject matter of a suit which occurred in the corresponding s. 503 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted See notes below under the head Receiver in proceedings other than a suit

Receiver in proceedings other than a suit—Sec 503 of the Code of 1882 contained the words subject matter of a suit The result was that under that section a receiver could only be appointed in a suit Those words have been omitted in the present rule so that a receiver may now be appointed even in proceedings other than a suit (i) A Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in proceedings under the Succession Certificates Act (m) or in proceedings for the removal of a trustee under s 74 of the Trusts Act (n) but may appoint a receiver in a testamentary suit (o) or proceeding under the Guardian and Wards Act (p) If no suit or litigious proceeding is pending with reference to the property the Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of it A receiver therefore cannot be appointed after the suit is compromised (q)

Courts empowered under this order—Under the Code of 1882 (s. 503) a receiver could only be appointed by High Courts and District Courts and not by the Courts subordinate to District Courts This bar has been now removed by the omission of s. 503 A receiver may now be appointed by Subordinate Judges also

A receiver is an officer of the Court—The object and purpose of the appointment of a receiver may generally be stated to be the preservation of the subject matter of the litigation pending a judicial determination of the rights of the parties thereto (r) The receiver is appointed for the benefit of all concerned he is the representative of the Court and of all parties interested in the litigation wherein he is appointed (s) The appointment [of a receiver] is the act of the Court and made in the interests of justice [A receiver] is an officer or representative of the Court and subject to its orders His possession is the possession of the Court by its receiver and the tenants in possession when he is appointed to receive rents and profits of immovable property become virtually tenants pro hac vice of the Court their landlord His possession is the possession of all the parties to the proceedings according to their titles The moneys in his hands are in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to them (t)

, r 1 Legal consequences arising from the fact that a receiver is an officer of the Court —

(1) Attachment—Property in the hands of a receiver cannot be attached without the leave of the Court first obtained. Thus if a receiver is appointed of certain property in a suit between A and B and C obtains a decree against A or B C cannot in execution of his decree attach the property in the hands of the receiver without the leave of the Court such an attachment is an interference with the Court's possession through its officer the receiver (u). But if a receiver is appointed of certain property in a suit between A and B and the property was mortgaged by A to C before the receiver was appointed and C obtains a decree for sale of the mortgaged property C may bring the property to sale though it may be in the hands of the receiver without the leave of the Court. The reason is that no attachment is necessary before sale in the case of a mortgage-decree and no attachment being necessary there cannot be any interference with the possession of the receiver (v).

(2) Suit by or against receiver Leave of Court—A receiver cannot sue or be sued except with the leave of the Court by which he was appointed receiver (w). A party feeling aggrieved by the conduct of a receiver may seek redress against him in the very suit in which he was appointed receiver or he may bring a separate suit against the receiver in which case he must obtain the leave of the Court (x). The application in the suit is for an examination pro interesse suo (y). The Court will dispose of the matter summarily in simple cases (z) and if the applicant has shown diligence (a). But if questions of title are involved the Court will authorize a suit to be brought against the receiver (b). No appeal lies against an order granting leave to sue a receiver (c). There is no statutory provision which requires a party to take the leave of the Court to sue a receiver. The rule has come down to us as a part of the rules of equity binding upon all Courts of Justice in this country. It is a rule based upon public policy which requires that when the Court has assumed possession of a property in the interest of the litigants before it the authority of the Court is not to be obstructed by suits deemed to disturb the possession of the Court. The institution of such suits is in the eye of the law a contempt of the authority of the Court and therefore the party contemplating such a suit is required to take the leave of the Court so as to absolve himself from that charge. The grant of such leave is made not in exercise of any power conferred by statute but in exercise of the inherent power which every Court possesses to prevent acts which constitute or are akin to an abuse of its authority (d). By giving leave to sue its receiver the Court does not relinquish possession of the property to the Court where the claim of the third party is asserted (e). The Court in which the suit is filed has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction restraining the receiver from dealing with the property (f) nor can the third party if he obtains a decree enforce it in execution. His proper course is to apply to the Court which appointed the receiver to direct the receiver to act in accordance with the decree (g). In Pramatha Nath v Khetra Nath (h) Bodilly J held that the leave of the Court to sue a receiver was a condition precedent to the right to sue and that if the leave was not obtained before suit it could not be granted subsequent to the institution of the suit and the suit should be dismissed. This decision was disapproved in subsequent Calcutta cases where it was held that the leave may be granted even after the institution of the suit (i). In a recent Bombay case (j) Pratt J. after an exhaustive review of the case law on the subject came to the same conclusion. The learned judge held that failure to obtain leave prior to the institution of the suit was cured by subsequent leave. As regards suits by a receiver it has been recently held by the High Court of Calcutta that if the suit is instituted without the leave of the Court the Court may grant leave after the institution of the suit to continue the suit (k). So also by the Madras High Court (l).

It may here be noted that a receiver is not a necessary party to a suit for a declaration of title and possession of property of which he is appointed receiver (m) nor can he be made a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code in his capacity of receiver (n). There is no right of action against a Tahsildar or other officer appointed by a receiver (o).

(3) Debts incurred by receiver in business—If a receiver is appointed of the estate of a deceased person with authority to continue the business carried on by the deceased and in the course of such business debts are properly incurred by the receiver the persons to whom the debts have become due may proceed not only against the receiver personally but also against the estate of the deceased for the recovery of their debts. They are entitled to payment of their debts in priority to other creditors of the estate. The right to proceed against the estate is founded on the just and equitable principle that as the acts of a receiver acting within his authority are the acts of the Court the estate cannot be permitted to enjoy the benefits of those acts without being held liable for the obligations arising out of them (p).

(4) Loss occasioned by receiver's default—If any loss is occasioned to the party by the wilful default or gross negligence of the receiver the loss is to be borne by the party on who an application the receiver was appointed (for a receiver is not a party to such party) but by the estate in the first instance. The party damaged by the loss may then proceed against the receiver (q). See r. 4 below.

(5) Agreement controlling receiver's powers—A receiver being an officer of the Court it is contempt of Court on the part of any of the parties to enter into an agreement with him restricting and controlling his powers. The Court alone has the power to determine the powers of a receiver (r).

(6) Remuneration—A receiver being an officer of the Court it is for the Court to determine his fees or remuneration (s. below). Hence a promise by a party for the remuneration of a receiver without leave of the Court is against law and void as to the promisee (t).

(7) Criminal Procedure Code s. 145—Where a receiver is appointed in a suit for property the subject of a suit a Magistrate has no jurisdiction under sec. 145 of the C.P.C. (u).

r 1 of Criminal Procedure to interfere with him in respect of his possession of the property without the sanction of the Court his possession being the possession of the Court (t). It may here be noted that a Civil Court has no power under this rule to appoint a receiver in supersession of a receiver appointed by a Magistrate under sec 140 cl. (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code (u) See sub rule (2)

(8) Prosecution of receiver—A receiver appointed by the High Court who has under its orders taken possession of property cannot be prosecuted for criminal breach of trust in respect thereof without first obtaining the leave of the Court (v)

(9) Attorney of party—The attorney of a party should not be appointed receiver as such an appointment interrupts the arrangement made by the party for his defence in the suit (w)

‘Just and convenient.—These words have been taken from the Judicature Act 1873 s 25 subs (8). The words in that Act are just or convenient but they have been constructed to mean just and convenient (x). The words just and convenient do not mean that the Court is to appoint a receiver simply because the Court thinks it convenient they mean that the Court should appoint a receiver for the protection of rights or for the prevention of injury according to legal principles (y). The order is discretionary and the discretion must be exercised in accordance with the principles on which judicial discretion is exercised (z). Hence the Court should not appoint a receiver of property in the possession of the defendant who claims it by a legal title unless the plaintiff can show prima facie that he has a strong case and a good title to the property (a). The Court must consider whether special interference with the possession of a defendant is required there being a well founded fear that the property in question will be dissipated or that other irreparable mischief may be done unless the Court gives its protection (b). On the other hand where property is shown to be in medio res in the enjoyment of no one the Court can hardly do wrong in appointing a receiver for it is the common interest of all parties to prevent a scramble (c). The mere circumstance that the appointment of a receiver will do no harm to any one is no ground for appointing a receiver (d) and a receiver cannot be appointed merely for the purpose of ascertaining the income of an estate in order to fix the amount of maintenance to be paid out of it (e). See notes above Alterations in the rule No 1 and notes below Cases in which a receiver may be appointed.” See also Specific Relief Act 1 of 1877 s 44

Which Court may appoint a receiver.—The power to appoint a receiver rests only with the Court trying the suit in which it is sought to appoint a receiver. Hence a District Judge has no power to appoint a receiver of property which is the subject of a suit in another Court even though subordinate to his own (f). A Court should not appoint a receiver when another receiver has been appointed of the same property by another Court in another suit for such a procedure will lead to a conflict of jurisdiction (g).

Whether a receiver can be appointed when an executor is in possession—In England the rule is that the Court will not appoint a receiver against an executor unless gross misconduct is shown (h) and the same rule it is submitted applies to the case of an executor of the will of a person subject to the provisions of the Indian Succession Act. This rule however does not apply in the case of an executor of the will of a Mahomedan. The reason is that while in the case of persons governed by the Succession Act a testator can dispose of the whole of his property by his will a Mahomedan testator cannot dispose of more than one third of the property by his will (i).

Where a receiver is appointed of the estate of a deceased person and the estate is being administered by the Court the Court may authorize the receiver to pay out of the estate in his hands pressing claims against the estate (j).

Company—The Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of a company (k). If it is necessary to protect the assets recourse must be had to the provisions of the Companies Acts.

Reference to arbitration—The Court has power to appoint a receiver even after a suit has been referred to arbitration (l).

Temporary injunctions and appointment of receiver—The distinction between a case in which a temporary injunction may be granted and a case in which a receiver may be appointed is that while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation in the former case it is sufficient if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged while in the latter case a good prima facie title to the property over which the receiver is sought to be appointed has to be made out (m).

When receiver may be appointed—The appointment of a receiver is in the discretion of the Court. The power to appoint a receiver is not to be exercised as a matter of course or for the reason that it can do no harm to appoint one. A receiver should not be appointed in supersession of a bona fide possessor of the property in dispute unless there is some substantial ground for interference (n). The mere fact that a plaintiff in his plaint makes violent and wholesale charges of waste is no ground for the appointment of a receiver (o). The Court will not in a suit against trustees for the possession of land and for mesne profits appoint a receiver merely because the trustee is a poor man from whom mesne profits if awarded could not be recovered unless it is alleged and shown that he was wasting the property (p). The removal however under suspicious circumstances of a large amount of property by the defendant during the pendency of a suit in which the question of title to that property would be determined is a good ground for the appointment of a receiver (q). The anxiety of a life tenant to transfer lands to a stranger is a danger to the interests of the reversioner and it is a matter to be taken into consideration on an application for the appointment of a receiver (r).

Joint Hindu family—The Court will not as a general rule appoint a receiver in a partition suit between members of a joint Hindu family especially where the family property consists of immovable property. To appoint a receiver in such a case special circumstances must be proved (s). A receiver may be appointed in a suit for partition

1 of joint Hindu family property where there is a prima facie case of misappropriation by the manager of the family (f)

Mortgage suits—In a mortgagee's suit for foreclosure or sale where the mortgagee is entitled to enter into possession on default in payment of the mortgage moneys the mortgagee is entitled prima facie to an order for the appointment of a receiver (u). The mortgagee in possession also is entitled to the appointment of a receiver notwithstanding that he has been paid all his interest and costs out of rents received by him while in possession and that he has surplus rent in his hands. It was so held in Mason v Westoby (v). In that case Bacon V.C. said: "It is said that the appointment of a receiver will cause great expense to the mortgagors but that cannot be helped. The mortgagee acting in accordance with her strict right enters into possession because she cannot get her interest. As mortgagee in possession she becomes subject to heavy responsibilities and from those responsibilities she is entitled to be relieved by the appointment of a receiver. She has however while in possession received more than the amount of her interest and costs but that surplus she must pay to the receiver. The appointment of a receiver will be made almost as a matter of course in the case of an English mortgage on an application of the mortgagee if the interest payable under the mortgage is in arrears and the mortgagee is entitled to sell the property for default in payment of interest (u). A receiver may also be appointed at the instance of an equitable mortgagee (x)." See also Re Bannister (1893) 1 Ch 280.

Testamentary suit—A receiver may be appointed in a testamentary suit (y).

Receiver in charity suits—A receiver may be appointed in a suit by the Advocate General under sec. 92 of the Code for the administration of public religious or charitable trusts (z).

Partnership suits—In considering the question of the appointment of a receiver in partnership suits a distinction has to be drawn between cases in which the contest is between partners and cases in which the contest is between partners on the one hand and non-partners on the other.

In the first class of cases that is where one partner seeks to have a receiver appointed against his co-partners it is necessary to distinguish cases in which the partnership has already been dissolved from those in which the partnership is still subsisting. If the partnership is already dissolved the Court usually appoints a receiver almost as a matter of course (a). The jurisdiction of the Court to appoint a receiver is not ousted by an arbitration clause providing for a reference to arbitration of all matters in dispute between the parties (b). But if the partnership is still subsisting no receiver will be appointed unless some special grounds for the appointment can be shown. There must be fraud or gross misconduct of some kind (c) or wilful denial of the complaining partners' rights (d) or persistence under cover of right in conduct endangering the assets (e).

In the second class of cases that is where the contest is between partners on the one hand and non partners on the other e.g. legal representatives of a late partner a receiver will not be granted against a member of the firm at the instance of the legal representatives unless some special grounds for the interference of the Court can be established But it is a matter of course to appoint a receiver where such appointment is sought by a partner against the legal representatives of his late co partner or where all the partners are dead and an action is pending between their representatives (f)

Decree for maintenance—Where a decree is passed for maintenance and a charge is created on a specified property to secure payment of the allowance it is desirable in order to facilitate execution and to avoid further litigation to appoint a receiver by the decree itself with directions in case of default of payment to take possession of the property and sell the same and out of the sale proceeds to pay the allowance (g)

Criminal Procedure Code sec 145—The fact that there exists in respect of any immovable property an order of a Magistrate passed under sec 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is no bar to the exercise by a Civil Court of the power conferred on it by this rule to appoint a receiver in respect of the same property (h) It is however different where a receiver is appointed by a Magistrate under sec 146 cl (2) of that Code See note above Legal consequences arising from the fact that a receiver is an officer of the Court no (7)

Receiver and administrator pendente lite—A receiver may be appointed under this rule in a testamentary suit governed by the Probate Act 1881 (i) The Chancery Division of the High Court of England may appoint a receiver of the estate of the deceased though proceedings have been commenced by the defendant in the Probate Court and though the defendant is prepared to apply at once in that Court for an administrator pendente lite (j)

Remove any person—This refers to a person other than the receiver (k) The Court should inquire into any claims made by persons not parties to the suit before appointing a receiver (l) A usufructuary mortgagee who has obtained a decree for sale is not entitled to possession as against the receiver on an agreement made with the mortgagor (m)

Where security not furnished by receiver—Where the order whereby a person is appointed receiver requires him to give security so that the order is conditional upon his giving the security he cannot be receiver until the security is given (n) It is otherwise where the order is not conditional but absolute in its terms in such a case the order takes effect immediately it is made (o)

Receiver of future earnings of judgment debtor—The Court has no jurisdiction to enforce satisfaction of a judgment debt by appointing a receiver of the future earning of the judgment debtor Unless a man has assigned or charged his future earnings or has made a sum payable out of them they cannot be prospectively impounded by any of his creditors by any ordinary process of execution, whether legal or equitable (p) Similarly a receiver cannot be appointed of future allowances of maintenance payable to a judgment debtor (q) See notes to sec 51 above

Receiver after decree—A receiver may be appointed even after a decree has been passed (r) See cl (a) of the rule

All such powers as to bringing and defending suits as the owner himself has —These words are wide enough to empower the Court to authorise a receiver to sue in his own name hence where a receiver is authorised in that behalf he may sue in his own name (s) And it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where a receiver is appointed with full powers under sub r (1) cl (d) that is with such powers as to bringing suits as the owner himself has the receiver is entitled to sue in his own name though not expressly authorized to do so (t) As regards suits for possession it is to be noted that though ordinarily a suit to recover possession of property can only be brought by him in whom there is a present title to it yet if a receiver is appointed under this rule with such powers as to bringing suits as the owner himself has he is entitled to sue for possession (u) But a receiver takes such title as the owner himself had in the property and he cannot therefore sue for possession in a case in which the owner himself could not have done so (t) A receiver empowered to collect outstandings and do all things necessary for the realization and preservation of the assets of a firm has no power to mortgage the property of the firm (u) But a receiver of mortgaged properties on whom has been conferred the same powers of realization management and protection as the owners themselves have has a discretionary power of sale (z)

Realization of property —After the dismissal of a suit in which a receiver has been appointed the Court has no power to give the receiver any fresh power as for instance liberty to sell (y)

All such powers as to the execution of documents which the owner himself has —This includes a power to the receiver to execute a conveyance including the share of a minor defendant (z)

Suit by or against receiver—leave of Court—See notes above under the same head

Contempt proceedings—Where a receiver is appointed of property the subject of a suit and the property is forcibly taken possession of by any person not only the parties interested in the property but also the receiver may proceed against such person for contempt There is nothing to prevent the receiver from himself applying for a rule for contempt (a)

Appointment of new receiver in place of old receiver—Where a receiver appointed under this rule institutes civil proceedings and is then replaced by another receiver it is necessary that the new receiver should be made a party to the proceedings (b)

Continuance of office—A Court appointing a receiver may by its order provide that the office should continue permanently after the decree when such continuance is necessary or for so long as it may be so (c)

A sues B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The suit is dismissed on a preliminary ground. A appeals to the High Court and pending the appeal B is appointed receiver of the property in dispute in the suit. The High Court sets aside the decree of the lower Court and the case is remanded to the lower Court for trial on the merits. When the appeal is over T forcibly enters into possession of the property in the possession of R as receiver. R applies to the High Court that T may be committed for contempt. It is contended for T that the appeal being over R must be decreed to have been discharged from the office of receiver when the appellate decree was passed. This contention will not prevail, though the appeal may be over R must be regarded as receiver of the property until he is finally discharged by the Court. Therefore R is entitled to make the application to commit T for contempt (d).

A receiver in a partition suit is not discharged merely by the passing of a preliminary decree for partition (e).

Receiver's liability to account—The Court appointing a receiver in a suit has authority incidental to its jurisdiction to order him to account although the suit may be no longer pending (f). Although the dismissal of a suit may in some cases mean the discharge of the receiver still the Court has jurisdiction over the receiver who is an officer of the Court. The Court has jurisdiction to require accounts from a receiver to enable the parties to examine accounts and to deal with all matters connected with the management of the receiver (g). See r 3 (b) below.

Suit by subsequent against former receiver—A suit cannot be maintained by a present receiver of an estate against the former receiver for the recovery of money alleged to be due by the former receiver to the estate (h).

Receiver's lien—A receiver though discharged is entitled to a lien on the estate for all his just claims and allowances. Hence the Court will not compel a receiver who has been discharged to make over the property in his possession until his lien has been satisfied or provided for by a sufficient indemnity (i).

Joint receivers—As a general rule appointment of more than one receiver whether by the same or a different Court except in case of joint receiver is not allowable (j).

Appeal—An appeal lies not only from an order granting an application to appoint a receiver but from an order rejecting such application (k) [O 43 r 1 cl (a)]. The Calcutta High Court holds that no appeal lies from an order appointing a receiver on condition of his furnishing security until the security is furnished (l) but such an order is appealable as a judgment under the Letters Patent (m). But no appeal lies from directions given by a Court in passing receiver's accounts. Such directions do not come within any of the four clauses of sub r (1) (n). No appeal however lies to the Privy Council from an order refusing to appoint a receiver (o). An order refusing to remove a receiver is not appealable (p). The Calcutta High Court has held that an appeal lies under O 43 r 1 (a) from an order removing a receiver on the ground that a power to

0, r 1 appoint includes a power to remove (q) but it is difficult to see what this principle has to do with the right of appeal

It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (r) Bombay (s) and Allahabad (t) that an order that a receiver be appointed without appointing anybody by name as receiver and adjourning the application to a later date for nominating a receiver is not an order within the meaning of this rule and it is not therefore appealable under O 43, r 1 cl (s). The contrary has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (u) and by the Patna High Court (v). No appeal lies from an order merely expressing an intention of appointing a receiver and calling upon parties to suggest names (w).

A receiver is appointed of B's property in a suit by A against B. C claims to be in possession of the property under an agreement between him and B and he objects to the appointment of the receiver but the objection is dismissed. The order comes within this rule though C is not a party to the suit and is therefore appealable (x). But a stranger who is not in possession has no right to object and no appeal lies from an order dismissing his objection (y). An order appointing a receiver pending an application for the appointment of a common manager under s 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1880 also falls under this rule and is therefore appealable under O 43 r 1 cl (s) (z).

Letters Patent appeal.—An order directing a receiver in a suit to advance money to a guardian ad litem to enable him to conduct the defence on behalf of a minor defendant is not a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent and no appeal lies therefrom (a). An order appointing a receiver is a judgment under the letters patent and appealable (b).

Revision.—If a Court appoints a receiver in a case in which it has no jurisdiction to do so as for instance in a proceeding under the Succession Certificate Act 1889 the High Court may interfere in revision (c).

A receiver cannot delegate his powers to others.—Where a receiver is appointed to collect the rents of an estate it is his duty to collect the rents himself or where the rents are collected by a clerk on his behalf to receive the rents and to keep proper accounts thereof. If the rents received by the clerk are misappropriated the receiver is bound to make good the loss. He is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court (d).

Summary jurisdiction.—Where the matter complained of rests on an agreement which has not been carried out the Court may interfere to prevent its receiver giving effect to the proposed agreement and thus it may do on the mere application of a party to the suit (e). But where the matter has passed out of the stage of agreement as where a lease has already been granted by the receiver no summary order could be passed to set aside the lease but the party aggrieved must proceed by suit against the receiver (f).

When receiver should be joined as a party to a suit.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where the property in the hands of a receiver is intended

affected by the result of a suit the receiver is a proper and necessary party to the by way of addition to the parties primarily responsible the reason given being that though the appointment of a receiver does not of itself debar the creditor of the person whose estate the receiver has been appointed from suing for his claim yet if the effect of the suit is to interfere with the possession of the receiver of the jurisdiction of Court appointing the receiver leave of the Court must be obtained and the receiver be a party to the suit (g) In one of these cases (h) a receiver was appointed of the estate

Hindu in a suit brought by his sons for administration of his estate One of the sons of the deceased filed a suit against the sons and joined the receiver as a party to the suit It was held that the receiver was a proper and a necessary party to the suit and that if he were not added as a party to the suit the suit was liable to be dismissed a Bombay case (i) also a creditor of the deceased in a suit brought by him against the sons of the deceased joined as a party the receiver of the estate of the deceased pointed in an administration suit brought by the sons The Small Causes Court made a decree not only against the sons but also against the receiver In revision it was held that no relief could be granted against the receiver in a suit filed in the Small Causes Court and the decree passed by that Court was set aside In the course of the appeal C J said If a party makes a claim for money due by a person who is dead against his representatives then he can only get a decree against the representatives to the extent of the assets in their hands and if the estate is not in their hands but in the hands of a receiver the plaintiff will have to go to the Court that appointed the receiver in order to attach the property in his hands But by no possible conception could the receiver be a necessary party in a suit to decide whether the plaintiff was entitled against the legal representatives of the deceased to recover money which he had advanced to the deceased in his life time

It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (r) Bombay (s) and Allahabad (t) that an order that a receiver be appointed without appointing anybody by name as receiver and adjourning the application to a later date for nominating a receiver is not an order within the meaning of this rule and it is not therefore appealable under O. 41 r. 1 cl. (s). The contrary has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (u) and by the Patna High Court (v). No appeal lies from an order merely expressing an intention of appointing a receiver and calling upon parties to suggest names (w).

A receiver is appointed of B's property in a suit by A against B. C claims to be in possession of the property under an agreement between him and B and he objects to the appointment of the receiver but the objection is dismissed. The order comes within this rule though C is not a party to the suit and is therefore appealable (x). But a stranger who is not in possession has no right to object and no appeal lies from an order dismissing his objection (y). An order appointing a receiver pending an application for the appointment of a common manager under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1890 also falls under this rule and is therefore appealable under O. 43 r. 1 cl. (i) (z).

Letters Patent appeal—An order directing a receiver in a suit to advance money to a guardian ad litem to enable him to conduct the defence on behalf of a minor defendant is not a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent and no appeal lies therefrom (a) An order appointing a receiver is a judgment under the letters patent and appealable (b)

Revision—If a Court appoints a receiver in a case in which it has no jurisdiction to do so as for instance in a proceeding under the Succession Certificate Act 1889 the High Court may interfere in revision (c)

A receiver cannot delegate his powers to others—Where a receiver is appointed to collect the rents of an estate it is his duty to collect the rents himself or where the rents are collected by a clerk on his behalf to receive the rents and to keep proper accounts thereof. If the rents received by the clerk are misappropriated the receiver is bound to make good the loss. He is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court (d)

Summary jurisdiction—Where the matter complained of rests on an agreement which has not been carried out the Court may interfere to prevent its receiver giving effect to the proposed agreement and this it may do on the mere application of a party to the suit (e). But where the matter has passed out of the stage of agreement as where a lease has already been granted by the receiver no summary order could be passed to set aside the lease but the party aggrieved must proceed by suit against the receiver (f).

When receiver should be joined as a party to a suit.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where the property in the hands of a receiver is intended

affected by the result of a suit the receiver is a proper and necessary party to the suit by way of addition to the parties primarily responsible the reason given being that although the appointment of a receiver does not of itself debar the creditor of the person whose estate the receiver has been appointed from suing for his claim yet if the result of the suit is to interfere with the possession of the receiver of the jurisdiction of the Court appointing the receiver leave of the Court must be obtained and the receiver is a party to the suit (j) In one of these cases (k) a receiver was appointed of the estate of a Hindu in a suit brought by his sons for administration of his estate One of the sons of the deceased filed a suit against the sons and joined the receiver as a party to the suit It was held that the receiver was a proper and a necessary party to the suit and that if he were not added as a party to the suit the suit was liable to be dismissed (l) In a Bombay case (1) although a creditor of the deceased in a suit brought by him against the sons of the deceased joined as a party the receiver of the estate of the deceased was not pointed in an administration suit brought by the sons The Small Causes Court made a decree not only against the sons but also against the receiver In revision it was held that no relief could be granted against the receiver in a suit filed in the Small Causes Court and the decree passed by that Court was set aside In the course of the judgment Macleod C J said If a party makes a claim for money due by a person who is dead against his representatives then he can only get a decree against the representatives to the extent of the assets in their hands and if the estate is not in their hands but in the hands of a receiver the plaintiff will have to go to the Court that appointed the receiver in order to attach the property in his hands But by no possible conception could the receiver be a necessary party in a suit to decide whether the plaintiff was entitled against the legal representatives of the deceased to recover money which he had advanced to the deceased in his life time

Form—For form of appointment of receiver see App F no 9

2 [ S 503, cl (d) ] The Court may by general or special order fix the amount to be paid as remuneration for the services of the receiver

Remuneration

Remuneration—See notes to r 1 above under the same head See also notes to r 1 Receiver's lien It has been held that the Court has inherent jurisdiction to make a plaintiff to refund to a party whom he has wrongly impleaded in a suit the commission and charges incurred by a receiver of the property of that party when the suit against him is dismissed and the receivership cancelled (2)

3 [ S 503, 2nd part ] Every receiver so appointed shall—

(d) be responsible for any loss occasioned to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence

Submit his accounts—The accounts should be supported by vouchers which will be admitted as evidence of payment unless reasonable ground for impeaching them is shown (l) Objections to the system of management adopted by the receiver cannot be heard as exceptions to the receiver's accounts but may be the subject of a scheme to be submitted for the orders of the Court (h) An application to take accounts against a receiver on a footing of wilful default and neglect must be made by suit and cannot be entertained when the receiver is passing his accounts (m) See notes to r 1 above

(a) fails to submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs, or

(b) fails to pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, or,

(c) occasions loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence, the Court may direct his property to be attached and may sell such property, and may apply the proceeds to make good any amount found to be due from him or any loss occasioned by him, and shall pay the balance (if any) to the receiver

Loss to property—The word property includes the income of property (o) See notes to r 1 above Loss occasioned by receiver's default

Removal of receiver—A receiver should not be allowed to continue in office if he fails to comply with the order of the Court to submit his accounts. Application for removal should be made to the Court which appointed him (p)

The Court may direct his property to be attached—The property may be attached even after the receiver's death in the hands of his legal representatives (q)

Wilful default—In Calcutta when a party seeks accounts against a receiver on the basis of wilful default and neglect the practice is to proceed by a suit and not by an application (r)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O 43 r 1 cl (s)]. But no appeal lies from an order declaring a receiver liable in respect of a sum of money unless the order includes a direction for the attachment of his property (s) See notes

ORDER XLI

Appeals from Original Decrees

1 [S 541] (1) Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints for this behalf. The memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded.

Form of appeal. What to accompany memorandum

(2) The memorandum shall set forth concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed from without any argument or narrative, and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively.

Contents of memorandum

Appeal from original decree—See s 96 and notes thereto

Defective vakalatnama.—A memorandum of appeal cannot be said to be properly presented if it is presented by a vakil whose name does not appear in the vakalatnama, even though the omission is due to an oversight. In such case the appeal should be dismissed though the objection to its validity is taken at a very late stage of the proceedings (u). A power of attorney expressly authorising presentation of the appeal is sufficient (x).

Signed.—If the memorandum of appeal is signed it matters not that the grounds of appeal are set forth in an unsigned annexure (y).

Memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of decree and judgment.—O 41 r 1 makes it an inflexible rule that in the case of appeals from decrees the memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree and judgment.

for the first time in appeal (q) And where in a suit for a declaratory decree it was contended for the first time in appeal that the Court had on the facts of the particular case no power to pass a declaratory decree it was held that the objection should not be entertained Such an objection does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court (r)

Limitation—As to the period of limitation for appeals see Limitation Act 1908 ch I arts 151 15- and 156 S 5 of the Limitation Act provides that an appeal may be admitted after the period of limitation if the appellant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within such period S 12 of the same Act provides that in computing the period of limitation provided for an appeal the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from should be excluded An appeal under s 169 of the Indian Companies Act 1882 to which the Code of Civil Procedure applies was filed as a joint appeal under the mistaken impression that the cases had been consolidated but the Lahore High Court on the ground that the mistake was one of form allowed the second appellant to put in a separate appeal (s) See notes to r a below Leave of Court Limitation

When appellate Court may not interfere with findings of fact—Two conflicting view points have to be reconciled namely on the one hand the undoubted duty of the Court of appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences and conclusions and on the other hand the unquestioned weight which must be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noting their looks and manner (t) Generally speaking it is undesirable for an appellate Court to interfere with the findings of fact of the trial judge who sees and hears the witnesses and has an opportunity of noting their demeanour especially in cases where the issue is simple and depends on the credit which attaches to one or other of conflicting witnesses The view of the trial judge as to the credibility of witnesses should not be put aside on a mere calculation of probabilities by the appellate Court (u)

Consolidation of appeals—The Code contains no provisions for consolidating suits or appeals Whether or not the Court has jurisdiction to consolidate appeals it will not do so unless before the hearing of the suits consolidation is asked for of the suits and unless the evidence given in the two cases is common to both of them (v) See notes to s 101 Inherent powers of Court Cf (a)

Form—For form of memorandum of appeal see App G form no 1

2 [S 542] The appellant shall not, except by leave of the Court, urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal, but the appellate Court, in deciding the appeal, shall not be confined to the grounds of objection set forth in the memorandum of appeal or taken by leave of the Court under this rule

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any other ground unless the party who may be affected thereby

r 2 has had a sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground

Leave of Court Limitation—The appellant cannot except by leave of the Court urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal. Thus if the plea that the suit is barred by limitation is not taken in the memorandum of appeal the appellant cannot urge that plea in appeal without the leave of the Court. The appellate Court may grant leave but it is not bound to do so. Notice to the respondent does not dispense with the necessity for leave of the Court (v). But the leave should not be refused if the point of limitation arises on the face of the plaint (x). Again under the latter part of this rule the appellate Court can of its own motion take cognizance of the question as to whether the suit is barred by limitation though the plea of limitation has not been taken in the memorandum of appeal and rest its decision on that ground provided the opposite party is given an opportunity of being heard on the point. In either case however the bar of limitation must be patent on the face of the proceedings (y). If it is not and the plea involves a fresh finding of fact the plea should not be allowed (z). The same rules apply where the plea that the suit is barred by limitation is raised for the first time in second appeal (a).

The case put above must be distinguished from the case contemplated by s. 3 of the Limitation Act 1908. That section provides that every suit instituted and every appeal preferred after the period of limitation shall be dismissed although limitation has not been set up as a defence. This means that under s. 3 it is the duty of the Court of first instance to dismiss a suit if it is barred by limitation whether the plea of limitation has been taken by the defendant or not (b). Similarly it is the duty of the appellate Court to dismiss an appeal before it if the appeal was barred by limitation when presented whether limitation has been set up as a defence or not that is to say if it is a first appeal the appeal should be dismissed by the first appellate Court and if it is a second appeal it should be dismissed by the second appellate Court. But that section does not impose any duty upon an appellate Court to entertain the plea of limitation if the question is not whether the appeal before it is barred by limitation but whether the suit was so barred. Similarly the said section does not impose any duty upon the second appellate Court to entertain the plea of limitation if the question is not whether the second appeal is barred by limitation but whether the first appeal was so barred. It is the provisions of the present rule that apply to the two last mentioned cases and not the provisions of s. 3 of the Limitation Act. Hence in those cases the plea of limitation must be specifically taken in the memorandum of appeal or by leave of the Court under this rule.

Proviso to the rule—The appellate Court is not precluded from taking its decision upon a ground not set forth in the memorandum of appeal nor taken by leave of the Court under this rule (c) but this power is exercised by the Court alone and neither party can claim it as of right (d). A litigant who has all along maintained a position in support of one branch of his suit cannot be permitted when he fails upon that branch to withdraw from the position and assert the contrary before the appellate Court more especially when he thereby places his opponent at a great disadvantage. In such a case the doctrine of estoppel owing to the conduct of the litigant applies (e). Further a litigant should not be allowed to take in appeal a point in the pleadings which has been

New questions of fact.—In this connection may be noted the following observations made in the course of a judgment in a Madras case Though we may perhaps consider in appeal any question of law arising from facts which are either admitted or undisputed we cannot allow without any satisfactory reason new questions of fact to be raised for the first time in appeal (g)

Making a new case in appeal—A court of appeal is not justified in exposing a party after he has obtained his decree to the brunt of a new attack of which he had never had notice during the hearing of the suit (h)

Ground common to all defendants—This rule provides that where there are more defendants than one and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the defendants any one of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree and thereupon the appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the defendants (m). The rule will not apply to different appeals on a common ground unless they have been consolidated (n). It is not necessary for the application of this rule that the decree should proceed on every ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants it is quite sufficient if it proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants. A sues B C and D for recovering possession of certain lands on declaration of title thereto alleging that he was dispossessed by all the defendants together in pursuance of a conspiracy between them. B C and D file separate written statements denying A a title and also denying dispossession and each claiming to hold separate parcels of land from third parties. The Court of first instance finds in favour of the title and the possession of A and that A was dispossessed by B C and D. B alone appeals from the decree. The appellate Court finds that A had failed to prove the title set up by him or that he was in possession of the land. Should the appellate Court reverse the decree of the lower Court in favour of B alone who appealed from the decree or should it reverse the decree of the lower Court in favour also of C and D though they did not join in the appeal? The answer is that if the decree of the lower Court proceeded on a ground common to all the three defendants the decree should be reversed under this rule not only in favour of B but also in favour of C and D. Now the ground of defence common to all the defendants was that A had no title to the lands and the decree of the lower Court proceeded on the ground that A had a title to the lands. The decree therefore proceeded on a ground common to all the defendants. The appellate Court should therefore reverse the decree not only in favour of B but also in favour of C and D. It is quite immaterial that the defendants claimed to be interested by different titles in separate portions of lands. It is enough if any one ground on which the decree appealed from proceeds is common to all the defendants (o). But the provisions of this rule do not apply unless the lower Court whose decree is appealed from has proceeded upon some ground common to all the plaintiff or all the defendants. If the lower Court has not proceeded upon any such ground it is not competent to the appellate Court to reverse the decree as to all the plaintiffs or all the defendants upon a ground which the appellate Court considers to be common to all the plaintiffs or all the defendants (p).

If in the case put above the appellate Court while reversing the decree in favour of B refuses to reverse it in favour also of C and D on the ground that it has no power to do so the decree of the appellate Court will be subject to revision for failure of exercise of jurisdiction (q). See s. 115 cl (b). If the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants the appellate Court may reverse the decree in favour of all the defendants even if some of the defendants suffered the decree to be passed ex parte against them (r).

Ground common to all the plaintiffs—A and his son B jointly sue C to recover Rs. 2 000. A decree is passed for the plaintiffs for Rs. 500 only. A alone appeals from the decree. C files cross objections under r. 22 below. The appellate Court rejects the plaintiff's claim in toto and reverses the decree of the lower Court. Subsequently B, who did not join in the appeal, applies for execution of the original decree against C. B is not entitled to take out execution for although he was not a party to the appeal, he is bound under this rule by the decree of the appellate Court (s).

See notes to r. 22 below. A respondent may urge cross objections against the appellant but not as a rule against a co-respondent.

May reverse decree in favour of all plaintiffs or defendants—The word may shows that the appellate Court is given a discretion in the matter. It may therefore reverse the decree in favour of some only of the plaintiffs or defendants. It is not bound to do so in favour of all of them (t).

Death of one of several appellants in cases where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all of them—See notes to O. 22 r. 3. This rule applies to appeals.

Stay of proceedings and of execution

5 [S. 545] (1) An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order, nor shall execution of a decree be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred from the decree, but the appellate Court may for sufficient cause order stay of execution of such decree.

(2) Where an application is made for stay of execution of an appealable decree before the expiration of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the Court which passed the decree may on sufficient cause being shown order the execution to be stayed.

(3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under sub-rule (1) or sub-rule (2) unless the Court making it is satisfied—

- (a) that substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is made,
- (b) that the application has been made without unreasonable delay, and
- (c) that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him.

- 5 (4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub rule (3), the Court may make an ex parte order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the application

Alterations in the rule—

- 1 The first part of sub r (1) namely "An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order" is new. The object is to make express provision for a stay of proceedings from a decree pending an appeal from the decree. Thus if a preliminary decree is passed in a suit for accounts between a principal and an agent (O 20 r 16) and an appeal is preferred from the decree the appellate Court may under this rule stay the inquiry into the accounts pending the appeal from the decree. Under the Code of 1857 the Court directed a stay in cases like these in the exercise of its inherent power as there was no express provision in the Code in that behalf (u).
- 2 Sub r (4) is new. It authorizes an ex parte stay. The need for such an order constantly arises in practice.

Stay of proceedings—Under this part of the rule the Bombay High Court in appeal suspended a sentence of imprisonment for an offence under s 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act 1907 now Provincial Insolvency Act 1908 s 69 the provisions of the Code being applicable to such appeal (v). See notes above. Alterations in the rule.

Stay of execution—Once an appeal is preferred from a decree it is the appellate Court alone that is seized of the matter and an application for a stay of execution should be made to that Court. Where no appeal is preferred the appellate Court has no jurisdiction not being seized of the case and cannot stay execution even on the assurance of a pleader that an appeal will be filed (w). The application for a stay in that case should be made to the Court which passed the decree but the application must not be entertained unless the decree is one from which an appeal lies and the application is made before the expiry of the time allowed by law for appealing therefrom (x). The application should be made to the Judge who decided the case and without unreasonable delay (y).

Though the appellate Court may under this rule stay proceedings in execution when an appeal is preferred from a decree it has no power to stay execution of a decree when an appeal is preferred from an order appealable under s 101. It obtains a decree ex parte against B. B applies under O 9 r 13 to have the decree set aside but the application is rejected. B appeals from the order rejecting the application under O 43 r 1 cl. (d) and applies to the appellate Court to stay execution of the ex parte decree against him. But as no appeal has been preferred from the decree the appellate Court is not competent to stay execution (z). Contrast r 8 below.

Where decree has been executed—An order for a stay of execution implies that the decree has not been executed. Therefore where a decree has been executed no order can be made under this rule (a). See r 6 below.

Circumstances under which stay of execution may be granted—The Court has power under this rule to make an order for a stay of execution for sufficient cause. But no order should be made for a stay of execution unless the Court is satisfied that substantial loss may result to the party applying for a stay of execution if the execution is not stayed (b) And even if the Court is satisfied that substantial loss may result no order should be made unless the application has been made without unreasonable delay and further unless the Court is satisfied that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree as may ultimately be binding upon him [sub r (3)] The Court should not accept a security the validity of which is not free from reasonable doubt and the enforcement of which may lead to protracted litigation (c) It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where the decree appealed from is for the payment of money execution should be stayed unless the respondent gives security for the repayment of the money in the event of the decree being reversed (d)

Notice to decree holder—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that a final order staying execution should not be made without notice to the decree holder if it is made without notice it is illegal and it may be set aside under s 115 above (e) The High Court of Patna however differs (f) An interim stay however may be granted ex parte [see sub r (4)]

Application of the rule—A obtains a decree against B for the recovery of certain immovable property and applies for execution of the decree If B has preferred an appeal from the decree B may apply to the appellate Court for a stay of execution on the ground that if execution is not stayed and the property is delivered to A A may do away with the property which may result in substantial loss to him If the appellate Court is satisfied the substantial loss may result if the execution is not stayed and if the application has been made without unreasonable delay the appellate Court may order execution to be stayed under this rule upon security being given by B that if the decree of the lower Court is confirmed he will deliver possession of the property to A If the decree of the lower Court is confirmed and if B fails to deliver possession of the property to A A may proceed against the surety

Security for performance of decree—The nature and extent of the liability of a surety under this rule depends on the words of the security bond (g) Thus where the bond was to perform all orders and decrees passed in appeal it was held that the obligation under the bond extended to the final decree passed in second appeal (h) When immovable property is given by a judgment debtor as security for the due performance of a decree under sub r (3) (c) it can be realized in execution without attachment The provisions of O 34 r 14 do not apply to such a case and the matter being one relating to execution s 47 bars a separate suit (i) As to the mode of enforcing a security bond given under this rule see notes to s 145 Security for the performance of any decree

There is a conflict of opinion whether a security bond given under this rule mortgaging immovable property exceeding Rs 100 in value requires registration under the Transfer of Property Act s 59 and the Registration Act s 17 it being held in some cases that it does (j) and in some that it does not (k)

security for the restitution of the property to him (B) or for the payment of the value thereof if the appeal is decided in his favour. The application may be made to the Court which passed the decree or to the appellate Court (a). If the application is made to the Court which passed the decree such Court shall on sufficient cause being shown by B for requiring the security direct A to give the security. But if the application is made to the appellate Court that Court may in its discretion require security to be given.

Enforcement of security bond given under this rule—See notes to sec. 145. Security for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree.

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this rule.

Form—For form of security bond see App G form no 3.

7 [S 547] No such security as is mentioned in rules 5 and 6 shall be required from the Secretary of State for India in Council or, where the Government has undertaken the defence of the suit, from any public officer sued in respect of an act alleged to be done by him in his official capacity.

8 [New] The powers conferred by rules 5 and 6 shall be exercisable where an appeal may be or has been preferred not from the decree but from an order made in execution of such decree.

Exercise of powers in appeal from order made in execution of decree.

Scope and object of the rule—This rule is new. It has been added to meet particularly the case where the litigant does not quarrel with the decree but appeals from an order passed in execution of that decree. In such a case the rule provides that the appellant may apply for a stay of execution of the decree under r 5 or for security for restitution under r 6. A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution. B objects to the execution but the objection is disallowed. B prefers an appeal from the order disallowing his objection. B may apply for a stay of execution of the decree under r 5 pending the disposal of the appeal from the order. This is in accordance with the undermentioned decision under the Code of 1862 (b).

for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both

Provided that the Court shall demand such security in all cases in which the appellant is residing out of British India, and is not possessed of any sufficient immovable property within British India other than the property (if any) to which the appeal relates

Where an appellant resides out of British India

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal

Scope and object of the rule—The object of the rule is to secure the respondent in an appeal from the risk of having to incur further costs which he might never recover from the appellant. Under sub r (1) the appellate Court may in its discretion require security for costs. Under the proviso to that sub rule the Court shall demand security for costs. If no security is furnished the Court should reject the appeal whether the order for security is made under the sub rule or the proviso (c)

To what appeals the rule applies—This rule applies not only to appeals from substantive decree but also to appeals from interlocutory orders under sec 104 and to appeals from orders in execution under sec 47 (d). The Privy Council have recently decided that it applies also to appeals under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (e). The Madras High Court has held that it was not so applicable because the Code dealt with appeals from one Court to another of higher grade while cl. 15 of the Letters Patent dealt with a different class of appeals (f). This was a good reason for holding that the right of appeal under the Letters Patent was not excluded by the words and from no other orders occurring in sec 588 of the Code of 1882 corresponding to sec 104 of the present Code (g) but it does not follow that the procedure of the Court in dealing with an appeal under the Letters Patent (now expressly saved by the words save as otherwise provided by any law inserted in sec 104) is not regulated by the Code. Where any part of the Code does not apply to High Courts specific provision is made to that effect. There is no such provision in respect of this rule. However a Chartered High Court is competent under sec 129 to make a rule inconsistent with O 41 r 10 and if it does the Code rule would not apply (h). Bombay High Court rule 736 prescribes a deposit of Rs 500 as security for respondent's costs as a condition of filing the appeal but this is not inconsistent with the present rule (i). Nor is rule 301 of the Madras High Court rules inconsistent (j).

Appeals in forma pauperis—It has been held by the High Court of Madras (i) that this rule applies to pauper appeals, thus an appellant who has presented his appeal in forma pauperis may be called upon to give security for costs under this rule but very special grounds must be shown to support such an application. On the other hand it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (l) Bombay (m) and Lahore ( ) that this rule does not apply to appeals preferred in forma pauperis.

In its discretion—Except in the case referred to in the proviso to sub-r (l) the power of the appellate Court to require security for costs is discretionary. The mere fact that the appellant is poor or insolvent is no ground for demanding security for costs (o). Similarly mere non payment of the costs of the original suit is no ground for calling upon the appellant to furnish security under this rule unless his conduct be shown to be vexatious that is such as indicates a wilful determination on his part not to obey the order of the Court in respect of costs (p). On the other hand when the respondent had failed to recover his costs in the lower Court Macleod C.J. made an order for security observing that the Court's discretion was absolute and could not be fettered by cases (q). It is submitted that this was a misuse of the word absolute for the discretion is a judicial discretion to be exercised in accordance with legal principles expounded in the cases. But the Court will as a general rule demand security for costs from a poor or insolvent appellant if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the appellant is not the real litigant but a mere puppet in the hands of others who are well able to furnish security (r) or if the merits of the case are plainly in favour of the respondent (s). See notes to O 20 r 1 Poverty of plaintiff.

At what stage respondent should apply for security—The respondent should apply promptly or else it might be urged that he had waived his right (t).

Order for security—When an order is made under this rule for security for costs, it is not necessary that any specific sum should be named in the order. It is sufficient if the order directs the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the original suit or for the costs of the appeal or for the costs of the appeal and the original suit (u). A surety for the costs of the appeal is discharged if the appeal is decided in favour of the appellant even if the appellate decree is reversed on second appeal (v). The taxing officer's decision as to the amount of the security is subject to revision by the High Court (w).

Extension of time for furnishing security—The appellate Court may under exceptional circumstances extend the time for furnishing security [see s 148]. Thus where the appellant alleged that he was unable on account of plague in Bombay to raise the money required for security within the time fixed by the Court the Court extended the time for giving security. The time for giving security may be extended either before or after its expiry (x).

Court shall reject the appeal —The appeal should not be rejected if the order for security has been made without notice to the appellant (y)

Restoring of appeal—An appeal although it may have been rejected by the appellate Court under this rule upon failure of the appellant to furnish security may be restored on sufficient grounds at the Court's discretion ( ) It is no excuse for not furnishing security in time that the appellant is a wandering fakir for it is the duty of every litigant to keep in touch with his case (a) Where the applicant applies for extension of time and the Court after hearing him on the application refuses to extend the time and rejects the appeal the appeal should not subsequently be restored (b) No appeal lies from an order refusing to restore an appeal (c)

Appeal from order rejecting appeal under sub rule (2)—An order rejecting an appeal under this rule is not appealable as an order under O 43 for it is not one of the orders specified therein. Nor is it appealable as a decree for it does not conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to any of the matters in controversy in the appeal within the meaning of the definition of decree [s 2 cl (2)] (d)

Appeal from order dismissing application to receive security for costs—An order is made under sub rule (1) directing an appellant to furnish security for costs. The order is indefinite in that it does not fix the exact date on or before which security is to be given. The appellant believing that the time for giving security has expired, applies to the Court to receive the amount fixed by the order as security. The Court hold that the time for furnishing security has expired and refuses the application. The appellant is entitled to appeal from the order under cl 15 of the Letters Patent as the effect of the order would be to finally deprive the appellant of his right of prosecuting his appeal (e)

Insolvency appeal—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether this rule applies to the case of an appeal from an order passed by a Judge of the High Court exercising jurisdiction in insolvency under the Presidency towns Insolvency Act 1909 the High Court of Madras holding that it does not (f) while the High Court of Calcutta holds that it does (g)

11 when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed

(3) The dismissal of an appeal under this rule shall be notified to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred

Alteration in the rule —

- 1 In sub r (1) the words after sending for the record if it thinks fit to do so are new These words have been added to empower the Court to send for the record if it thinks fit to do so before summarily dismissing an appeal without giving notice to the respondent
- 2 The words the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed have been substituted for the words the appeal shall be dismissed / e default to make it clear that no appeal lies from an order of dismissal for default See s 2 cl (2) sub cl (b) Under the old section it was held that a decision dismissing an appeal for default was a decree and was therefore appealable (A)

Dismissal of appeal under sub rule (1) whether judgment necessary—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the dismissal of an appeal under sub r (1) did not relieve the lower appellate Court from the necessity of writing a judgment in the manner prescribed by s. 574 of that Code [now r 31 of this Order] (i) A different view however was taken by the High Court of Allahabad (j) The present Order is divided into distinct parts under appropriate headings an arrangement which did not appear in the corresponding Chapter of the Code of 1882 Rule 11 comes under the heading Procedure on admission of appeal The next heading of the Order is Procedure on hearing and r 31 comes under the next following heading Judgment in appeal Relying upon this classification it was held by the High Court of Bombay in Tanaji v Shanlar (k) that under the present Code it is not obligatory upon the lower appellate Court in dismissing an appeal under this rule to write a judgment as required by r 31 But this decision has since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same Court on the ground that it was in conflict with the previous practice of that Court which was based on a Civil Circular being Circular 51 published in 1890 under the provisions of the High Courts Act 1861 by which it is provided that when an appellate Court dismisses an appeal under s. 501 (now r 11 of this Order) a judgment should be written and a formal decree drawn up In the course of the judgment Sir Basil Scott C.J. said There is nothing in the new Code of Civil Procedure which introduces any change in the law except in so far as the rules commencing with rule 9 of Order XXI are headed Procedure on admission of appeal That change is not sufficient to abrogate the rule published under the High Courts Act which is quite consistent with the provisions of the Code (l) The result is that according to the Bombay High Court when an appeal is dismissed under this rule a judgment should be written and a formal decree drawn up The High Courts of Calcutta and Rangoon have given the same decision under the present Code (m). Even if the judgment is not pronounced in the form prescribed by rule 31 the decision is a decree (n)

Dismissal of appeal for default under sub rule (2) —Where an appeal is dismissed for default it is the decree of the lower Court alone that can be enforced in execution (o) See notes to s 36 What decrees may be executed

Review —Dismissal of an appeal under this rule bars a review of the judgment appealed against see notes under O 47 r 1 The order under this rule dismissing the appeal is itself subject to review and the practice of the Calcutta High Court is to grant a review and order the rehearing of the appeal ex parte (p) When a second appeal is dismissed under this rule the High Court has no power to review its judgment on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter (q) See notes to O 47 r 1 No review allowed on a question of fact after decision of second appeal

Re admission of appeal dismissed for default under sub rule (2) —An appeal dismissed under sub r (2) may be re admitted under r 19

12 [S 552] (1) Unless the appellate Court dismisses the appeal under rule 11, it shall fix a day for hearing the appeal

Day for hearing appeal

(2) Such day shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the respondent, and the time necessary for the service of the notice of appeal, so as to allow the respondent sufficient time to appear and answer the appeal on such day

13 [S 552] (1) Where the appeal is not dismissed under rule 11, the appellate Court shall send notice of the appeal to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred

Appellate Court to give notice to Court whose decree appealed from

(2) Where the appeal is from the decree of a Court, the records of which are not deposited in the appellate Court, the Court receiving such notice shall send with all practicable despatch all material papers in the suit, or such papers as may be specially called for by the appellate Court

Transmission of papers to appellate Court

(2) The Court shall then, if it does not dismiss the appeal at once hear the respondent against the appeal, and in such case the appellant shall be entitled to reply

Right to begin—The mere fact that the respondent calls in question the right of the appellant to appeal does not give the respondent the right to begin (r)

It is the duty of the appellant to satisfy the Court of appeal that the decision of the trial Court is erroneous (s) In every appeal it is incumbent upon the appellant to show some reason why the judgment appealed from should be disturbed There must be some balance in his favour to justify the alteration of the judgment as it stands (t)

Re admission of appeal dismissed for default and, where it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing or from depositing the sum so required, the Court shall re admit the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit

Sufficient cause —The carelessness of an advocates clerk does not constitute sufficient cause (a) But where the appellants pleader appeared soon after the appeal was dismissed it was restored on the ground that the failure to appear was unintentional (b) The absence of appellants pleader owing to an engagement in another Court has been held to be sufficient cause (c)

Appeal —An appeal lies from an order of refusal to re admit an appeal [O 23 r 1 cl (t)] But no appeal lies from an order re admitting an appeal (d)

Dismissal of appeal for failure to deposit costs of paper book or to pay court fees —Where an appeal is dismissed under the rules of a High Court for failure to deposit the costs of preparation of the paper book as required by the rules the decree may be set aside not by an order under this rule but by an order on an application for a review (e) So also if it is dismissed for failure to pay Court fees (f)

Inherent power to restore appeal dismissed for default —Although a cause may not amount to a sufficient cause within the meaning of this rule the Court has inherent power to pass an order of restoration if it considers that a case for restoration has been made out (g) According to the Bombay High Court (h) the Court has inherent power to admit an application for re admission that is time barred under Art 163 of the Limitation Act but the Lahore (i) and Madras (j) High Courts differ following Acharya v Narayana (k) See note under O 9 r 9 Inherent power to restore suit dismissed for default

Form —For form of notice to a party to a suit not made a party to the appeal see Appendix G form no 7

21 [S 560] Where an appeal is heard ex parte and judgment is pronounced against the respondent, he may apply to the appellate Court to re hear the appeal, and, if he satisfies the Court that the notice was not duly served or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court shall re hear the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit to impose upon him

See O 9 r 13 and notes thereto

Sufficient cause —Where counsel for respondent was unable to appear at the hearing as the respondent's agent had taken away the papers it was held that it was not sufficient cause for re hearing the appeal (a) But when the party's agent could not appear to instruct the pleader because of his daughter's illness this was considered sufficient cause (b)

Appeal —An appeal lies from an order of refusal to re hear an appeal [O 43 r 1 cl (t)]

22 [S 561] (1) Any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed such objection in the appellate Court within one month from the date of service on him or his pleader of notice of the day fixed for hearing the appeal, or within such further time as the appellate Court may see fit to allow

(2) Such cross objection shall be in the form of a memorandum, and the provisions of rule 1, so far as they relate to the form and contents of the memorandum of appeal, shall apply thereto

(3) Unless the respondent files with the objection a written acknowledgment from the party who may be affected by such objection or his pleader of having received a copy thereof, the appellate Court shall cause a copy to be served, as soon as may be after the filing of the objection on such party or his pleader at the expense of the respondent

(a) Baji Lal v Nasool Singh (1917) 39 All 388 39 I C 636 | (b) Godhani v Shyam (1911) 19 All L J 517 63 I C 727 (1) A A 264

(4) Where, in any case in which any respondent has O 41, r under this rule filed a memorandum of objection the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit

(5) The provisions relating to pauper appeals shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to an objection under this rule

Alterations in the rule—The words upon the hearing which occurred in the first paragraph of s 561 of the Code of 1882 [now sub r 1] between the words may and not only support have been omitted and sub rule (4) has been added See notes below under the head Sub rule (4) where the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed for default The words the party who may be affected by such objection in sub r (3) have been substituted for the words the appellant which occurred in s 561

Cross objections—If in a suit brought by A against B B sets up two defences and the Court of first instance decides both in B's favour and A appeals there is no scope for cross objections for cross objections cannot be filed as criticisms of a judgment (c) but if the Court decides in B's favour as to one and against him as to the other then if A appeals B may support the decree at the hearing of the appeal not only on the ground decided in his favour but also on the ground decided against him without filing any cross objections (d) In the case put above the decree was entirely in B's (respondent's) favour But if A's claim is decreed in part A may appeal from the decree alleging that the decree ought to have been for the full amount claimed by him And B also may appeal from the decree alleging that the suit ought to have been dismissed altogether If A appeals from the decree and B also appeals B's appeal is called a cross appeal But instead of filing a cross appeal B may file cross objections under this rule In cross objections B may take any objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal (e) If no cross objections are filed by a respondent the appellate Court has no power to grant any relief to him in a case where the granting of such relief is not necessarily incidental to the relief granted to the appellant (f) nor has it the power in the absence of cross objections to disturb so much of the original decree as is favourable to the appellant so as to place the appellant in a worse position (g) Appellate Court should not proceed to decide on a point not raised either by the appellant or respondent (h)

Support the decree—The respondent without filing cross objections may support the decree on grounds decided against him by the lower Court But this does not authorize the respondent to make out a case for a decree for the same amount by questioning some adjudication as to right found against him and as to which no appeal or objection has been filed The expression support the decree means support the decision and does not refer to the quantum of the decree (i)

22 Sub rule (4) where the appeal is withdrawn or has abated or is dismissed for default—The old section commenced with the words any respondent may upon the hearing not only support the decree etc It was accordingly held that a respondent can be heard in support of his cross objections only upon the hearing of the appeal. If the appeal was withdrawn before the hearing the respondent it was held, had no right to be heard in support of his cross objections (j) though the Court might in such a case allow him to prefer a regular appeal from the decree (k) But if the hearing had once commenced the appeal it was held could not be withdrawn so as to prevent the cross objections being heard and determined (l) This distinction has now been done away with by the omission of the words upon the hearing in sub r (1) and by the addition of sub r (4) Under the present rule the withdrawal of an appeal is no bar to the hearing of cross objection filed by a respondent whether the appeal is withdrawn before or after the hearing Similarly the dismissal of an appeal for default is no bar to the hearing of cross objections Thus was correctly admitted in Bhimasena v Venugopal (m) a Letters Patent appeal but the reasoning so far as it proceeds on the assumption that O 41 does not apply to Letters Patent appeals seems opposed to the Privy Council decision in Savtri v Sav (n) The dismissal of an appeal upon the appellant's failure to give security for costs is a dismissal for default within the meaning of sub r (4) (o) But if the appeal has abated the respondent is not entitled to have his cross objections heard (p)

Under the old section the High Court of Allahabad held that the dismissal of an appeal as filed out of time was a bar to the hearing of cross objections (q) A Full Bench of the Madras High Court holds that the law is the same under the present rule (r) The Lahore High Court has held that an appeal must be properly filed before the Court in order that cross objections may be heard (s) and it has been held that where an appeal is dismissed on the ground of insufficiency of Court fee stamp the Court has no power to hear cross objections (t) The last mentioned decision is based on the ground that except in the case of the original appeal being withdrawn or dismissed for default as expressly provided for in sub r (4) the general rule that cross objections cannot be heard unless the appeal is decided on the merits is still in force But the dismissal of an appeal on the ground of non joinder of a party in a mortgage suit has been held not to be a bar to the hearing of cross objections the reason given being that in such a case the appeal is heard the question of non joinder being one that arises in the appeal itself and is not extraneous to it as would be a question as to whether it was presented in proper time or not (u)

Who may file cross objections—Cross objections under this rule can only be filed by a party who might have appealed from the decree of the Court below but has not done so It is not open to the party who has appealed and whose appeal has been dismissed subsequently to prefer cross objections under this rule A sues B for damages A's claim is decreed in part A appeals from that part of the decree which is against him B also appeals from that part of the decree which is against him A's appeal is heard and dismissed Before B's appeal is heard A files cross objections in B's appeal setting up the same grounds upon which in his own appeal he had asked for relief. A's cross objections should not be heard (v). Again A obtains a decree in a partnership suit which is against B one of the defendants as ex parte. B does not apply under O 9 r 13 to set aside the ex parte decree. B cannot therefore file cross objections in A's appeal that he should have been given a hearing (w). But in a case where B before the ex parte decree was passed presented a petition asking to be heard under the erroneous impression that the ex parte decree had already been passed it was held that he was not barred from filing cross objections on the ground that he was not heard (x). Cross objections as to costs in the Courts below will not be entertained in second appeal (v).

A respondent may urge cross objections against the appellant but not as a rule against a co respondent.—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta Bombay and Allahabad that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross objections should be limited to his urging them only against the appellant and that it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross objections as against other respondents the exception holding good in those cases in which the appeal opens up questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co respondents (z). Thus in suits for dissolution of partnership and for accounts it is open to any respondent to prefer cross objections against a co respondent on any item in dispute between them. The reason is that in such suits accounts are taken not between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendants on the other but between all the partners. A, B and C constitute a partnership firm. A sues B and C for dissolution of partnership and for accounts. A decree is passed in the suit declaring the amount coming to the share of each partner on the taking of accounts. A appeals from the decree. B and C are joined as respondents to the appeal. In such a case it is open to B to prefer cross objections against C in respect of an item in dispute between B and C (a). Similarly when the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the parties against whom it is passed and the appeal is preferred by some only of such parties e.g. where the suit is—A v B and C and a decree is passed both against B and C and the appeal is—B v A and C. A who is the plaintiff respondent may prefer cross objections not only against B the appellant but against C the co respondent. A sues B and C to recover Rs 5 000 alleged to be his share of the profits of certain lands. A decree is passed for A for Rs 3 000 against B and C. B appeals from the decree. C does not join B in the appeal and he is therefore made a party respondent. The appeal thus is—B v A and C. In such a case it is open to A to prefer cross objections not only against B but also against C in respect of that portion of his claim that was disallowed by the Court of first instance namely Rs 2 000 (b). According to the Madras (c) and Lahore (d) High Courts a respondent may urge cross objections against a co respondent in any and every case. Note in this connection the substitution in sub r (3) of the words "the party who may be affected by such objection" for the words "the appellant" which occurred in sec 561 of the Code of 1882.

Application for leave to file cross objections in forma pauperis—An application for leave to file cross objections in forma pauperis may be received by the Court at any time (e)

Or within such further time —This rule requires that cross objections should be filed by the respondent within one month from the date of the service of notice of the appeal. But the time may be extended if sufficient cause is shown (f)

Application of the rule—Cross objections may be filed not only in first appeal but also in second appeal (O 42). They may also be filed in appeals from orders preferred under sec 104 and O 43 [See O 43 r 2]

Second appeal—A second appeal will lie from a decree of the first appellate Court disallowing the cross objections of a respondent (g)

Letters Patent appeal—The Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held that the provision for respondents filing cross objections does not apply to Letters Patent appeals (h) but it is doubtful if this is correct in view of the Privy Council decision in Sabitri v Sati (i)

Form—As to form of memorandum of cross objections see App G form no 8

23 [S 562] Where the Court from whose decree an appeal is preferred has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree is reversed in appeal, the appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the cases so remanded, and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suit and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions, be evidence during the trial after remand

Alterations in the rule—The words and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall subject to all just exceptions be evidence during the trial after remand at the end of the rule are new

Scope of the rule—It is not competent to the appellate Court under this rule to remand the case for further evidence to the lower Court and to require that Court to pass another decree. All that the appellate Court is empowered to do is to frame an issue and to send down that issue to the Court below for the return of a finding and it is the duty of the appellate Court after receiving that finding to dispose of the appeal upon the evidence before it (j). The appellate Court cannot after finding on facts remand the case to the lower Court to pass a decree in accordance with that finding (k)

Preliminary point—This rule enables the appellate Court to remand a case to the lower Court for determination on the merits if the lower Court has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree of that Court is reversed in appeal. The expression preliminary point is not confined to such legal points only as may be pleaded in bar of a suit but comprehends all points or issues whether of fact or of law the determination of which has precluded the necessity for determining other points or issues which have therefore been left undetermined (h) A Full Bench of the Madras High Court defined it as any point whether of fact or of law the decision of which avoids the necessity for a full hearing of the suit (m) Thus where the lower Court dismisses the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation or that the Court has no jurisdiction to hear the suit or that the necessary leave has not been obtained or that the plaintiff does not on the face of it disclose any cause of action (n) or that it is barred by the events in an earlier suit (o) and the appellate Court reverses the decree of the lower Court on those grounds it may remand the case to the lower Court to be proceeded with on the merits Where several issues are raised in a suit one of which is that of undue influence and the Court dismisses the suit on a finding that there was undue influence without a finding on the other issues the decision amounts to a disposal of the suit upon a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule (p) Similarly if A sues B to recover a sum of money on the basis of an award and four issues are framed one of which is whether the award is valid and binding and the Court after recording evidence on all the issues dismisses the suit on the ground that the award is invalid leaving the other issues undecided the appellate Court may if it finds that the decision of the lower Court on the issue as to the validity of the award is wrong remand the case to the lower Court to be disposed of on the merits It does not matter that evidence has been recorded on all the issues (q) But where the first Court has decided a suit on the merits of the whole case as where the suit is decided on all the evidence and on all the issues the appellate Court cannot remand the case under this rule (r) Where the first Court heard the entire suit and found all issues in favour of the plaintiff except one namely whether the suit was maintainable having regard to the provisions of O 21 r 92 and dismissed the suit on the finding that the suit was not maintainable it was held by the Patna High Court that the suit was disposed of on a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule (s) This decision is in conflict with the decisions referred to above and it is submitted, is not good law To pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the strength of a plan put in by the plaintiff in a suit for possession of land is not a decision of the suit on a preliminary point and no remand can be made in such a case under this rule (t) In a Bombay case the appellate Court was of opinion that certain findings of facts were necessary for the disposal of the appeal and that evidence should be taken on those points and it made an order of remand under this rule It was held that the Court had no power to make the order under this rule though such an order could be made under Rule 25 below (u)

No order of remand can be made under this rule unless the lower Court has disposed of the whole suit upon a preliminary point This rule authorises a remand only where

r 23 the entire suit and not only a portion of it has been disposed of by the Court below on a preliminary point (v) Assuming that the entire suit is decided on a preliminary point it is further necessary before an order of remand can be made under this rule that the appellate Court should also find that the decision on the preliminary point is wrong It is not a good ground therefore for making an order under this rule that the preliminary issue e.g. an issue of limitation has been decided by the Court of first instance on a wrong view of the burden of proof unless the appellate Court finds that the issue itself has been wrongly decided (w) Again if the lower Court decides the suit on several preliminary points the appellate Court should not remand the suit without deciding all those preliminary points (x)

Inherent power of remand Remand in case of error omission or irregularity—No order of remand can be made under the present rule except when the suit has been disposed of on a preliminary point There are however cases in which suits have not been disposed of on a preliminary point and yet the Courts have claimed the power to remand the case professing to do so in the exercise of their inherent power [see s 151] These are cases in which the lower Court has committed any error omission or irregularity by reason of which there has not been a proper trial or an effectual or complete adjudication of the suit and the party complaining of such error omission or irregularity has been materially prejudiced thereby Thus if a suit is defective for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action the proper course is to return the plaint to the plaintiff for amendment and not to dismiss the suit (see notes to O 2 r 3 on p 441 above) If the lower Court dismisses the suit instead of returning the plaint for amendment the appellate Court may set aside the decree and remand the suit with a direction to the lower Court to return the plaint to the plaintiff for amendment and to proceed with the suit after the plaint is amended (y) Similarly where a suit is brought in the name of a wrong person as plaintiff the appellate Court may direct the plaint to be amended and remand the case for re-trial (z) Where time was granted to the plaintiff to produce his evidence—but neither he nor his pleader appeared on the day to which the hearing was adjourned and the lower Court instead of proceeding to dispose of the suit under O 17 r 3 dismissed the suit for default under O 17 r 2 it was held that the appellate Court had power to remand the case to be disposed of in the manner prescribed by O 17 r 3 (a) A case may also be remanded where the decision of the lower Court is given without taking the defendant's evidence (b) In a Bombay case (c) the lower Court had erroneously presumed the death of the mortgagor and decreed redemption by a person claiming to be his heir and the High Court reversed the decree and remanded the case for re-trial after joining the mortgagor as a party

Sections 562 and 566 of the Code of 1882 [now rr 23 and 25 of this Order] were the only sections that provided for a remand The cases cited in the preceding paragraph did not fall under either of those sections Moreover the Code of 1882 contained a section (s 564) which prohibited the appellate Court from remanding a case except as provided by s 562 This section was found in its working to be embarrassing and to get over the difficulty presented by cases of the kind cited in the preceding paragraph the Courts resorted to their inherent jurisdiction That section has been omitted in this Code on the ground that it was unduly restrictive The absolute prohibition of s 564 having been removed the Court it is said is free under s 151 to make an order of remand though the case may not fall either under this rule or rule 25 (d) It has accordingly been held that as under the old Code so under the new Code an order of remand can be made though the suit was not disposed of on a point which can be called a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule provided such an order is necessary for the ends of justice (e) In Vabin Chandrav Prankrishna (f) however Stephen and Mullick JJ expressed the opinion that if the appellate Court had at all any inherent power to remand that power was taken away by s 107 read with O 41 rr 23 and 25 and that under s 107 an appellate Court can only remand a case subject to such limitations as may be prescribed that is prescribed by rules 23 and 25 of O 41 The view so expressed ignores entirely the specific provisions of s 151 of the Code In Mans Mohan v Ramtaran (g) Jenkins CJ after observing that the combined effect of s 107 and O 41 r 23 was to limit the power of remand to the position described in O 41 r 23 said And this is the general rule except under special conditions which have no application in the circumstances of this case The view taken by Stephen and Mullick JJ was dissented from by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ghuzna: v The Allahabad Bank Ltd (h) where it was held that the powers of the appellate Court as regards remand are not restricted to the case specified in O 41 r 23 but that the Court by reason of its inherent jurisdiction recognized and preserved in the Code [s 151] may order a remand in cases other than the case specified in O 41 r 23 if it be necessary for the ends of justice It has thus been held that an appellate Court may direct a plaint to be amended by adding parties and remand the whole case to the Court below (i) The High Court of Patna has followed the Full Bench ruling in Ghuzna: s case (j) So also the High Courts of Bombay (k) Madras (l) and Lahore (m) The Allahabad High Court treats the question as unsettled but puts a very wide construction on rule 23 (n) See notes to r 33 below Remand

Remand in appeal from ex parte decree—See notes to s 96 Appeal from ex parte decree

Appeal—An appeal lies under O 43 r 1 cl (u) from an order remanding a case where an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court (p). This means that the order of remand is appealable only in cases in which an appeal would lie from the decree which would have been passed by the appellate Court had that Court decided the case without a remand (q). No appeal lies from a remand order in an appeal from an execution proceeding if the suit is of such a nature that by reason of s 102 no second appeal lies (r). If no appeal is preferred from the order of remand the party aggrieved by the order cannot afterwards dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree s 100 sub s (2) and notes thereto. But though an appeal lies from an order of remand it must be preferred according to the Calcutta High Court before the final disposal of the remanded suit otherwise it cannot be entertained. The reason given is that the right of appeal given by s 104 and O 43 from orders specified therein ceases with the disposal of the suit (s). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the appeal may be preferred even after the decision of the remanded suit provided it is within the period of limitation. The Allahabad Court proceeds on the ground that there is no provision in the Code imposing any such restriction on the right of appeal (t). The period of limitation for an appeal from an order of remand is 90 days from the date of the order [Limitation Act art 156].

Though an appeal lies under rule 1 of Order 43 from an order of remand no appeal will lie from the order when the order is itself made in an appeal preferred under any other clause of that rule. Thus if an appeal is preferred under O 43 r 1 cl (a) from an order under O 7 r 10 or under O 43 r 1 cl (j) from an order under O 21 r 22 or under O 43 r 1 cl (q) from an order under O 38 r 6 or under any other clause of Order 43 r 1 and the appellate Court allows the appeal and makes an order of remand no appeal will lie from the order of remand under O 43 r 1 cl (u). The reason is that cl (u) of O 43 is subject to s 104 sub s (2) which provides that no appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal [it may be an order of remand] under that section (u).

Appeal from remand under the inherent power—When the order of remand is made under the inherent jurisdiction recognized in Ghazna v The Allahabad Bank (v) is it appealable? There are several decisions against such an appeal (u). Mukerji J says an appeal lies because the order of remand is itself a decree (z) but if that were so the provisions of O 43 r 1 cl (u) would be superfluous. The correct answer seems to be that rule 23 should be construed as widely as possible and that the right of appeal should not be curtailed except on very clear proof of circumstances justifying such curtailment. Therefore even if the order of remand cannot be justified under the rule yet if it is in substance an order under that rule an appeal will lie (y). This 13, of course subject to the same condition that an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court. The Madras High Court has held that an order of remand in the inherent jurisdiction is not subject to revision (2). The Calcutta High Court says that if the order cannot be justified either under rule 23 or the inherent jurisdiction the proper remedy is to challenge its validity by revision (a).

Powers of High Court in appeal from order of remand—In an appeal from an order of remand preferred under O 43 r 1 cl. (u) the High Court is not confined to the question whether the order satisfies the requirements of the present rule but may also determine the correctness of the lower appellate Court's decision on the preliminary point on which the Court of first instance disposed of the case. Thus if the Court of first instance dismisses a suit as barred by limitation and the appellate Court reverses the decree and remands the case under this rule and an appeal is preferred to the High Court from the order of remand the High Court has the power to determine whether the point of limitation was correctly decided by the lower appellate Court (b).

Letters Patent appeal—In order of remand made by a single Judge of the High Court in second appeal is a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable as such (c)

Privy Council appeal—See notes to s. 109

Improper order of remand.—Under the Code of 1852 an order under s 562 was appealable and a party might impeach the order of remand on appeal from the final decree. When no appeal was preferred from the order of remand but the order was impeached on appeal from the final decree and the Court found that the order was improperly made the question arose as to whether the order should be treated as illegal or merely irregular. The High Court of Allahabad held that if a remand was ordered in a case in which it ought not to have been ordered both the order of remand and all the proceedings subsequent thereto are void and illegal (d). On the other hand the Calcutta High Court held that the remand order and the subsequent proceedings are not illegal but merely irregular and the subsequent proceedings should not be set aside unless the remand had substantially affected the decision of the remanded suit on the merits and the party complaining of the irregularity was materially prejudiced thereby (e) [see s 99]. The Madras High Court held that though an order of remand made in contravention of the provisions of s 562 is illegal yet the error may be cured by the consent of parties or by waiver (f). The whole difficulty has been got over in the present Code by enacting that a party who does not appeal from an order of remand in the first instance cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the order on appeal from the final decree (g) [see s 105 sub s (2)].

Remand of case by consent for trial on issues not raised in appeal — The effect of an appeal is to re open the decrees of the lower Court and it is competent to the appellate Court on the agreement of parties to remand the case to the lower Court for trial on issues not raised in the memorandum of appeal (h)

Trial Court — Jurisdiction to try the case remanded depends entirely upon the order of the appellate Court (1)

This rule does not enable an appellate Court to declare a right in favour of one of the parties where no issue has been framed on the point and the right has not been set up in the lower Court (k)

Second appeal—See s 103 and notes thereto

25 [S 566] Where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required

Scope of the rule—This rule refers to cases in which the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the appellate Court to determine the suit

May if necessary frame issues—In framing issues under this rule the appellate Court should have regard to the provisions of O 14 r 3 which indicate the materials from which issues are to be framed. The issues may be on points not taken in the grounds of appeal (l). See notes to O 14 rr 1 to 5

Power of Court to which issues are referred for trial under this rule—The Court to which issues are referred for trial under this rule has no power to try and decide the case but to try issues only. It should then return the evidence to the appellate Court together with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor (m)

New issue raised before High Court — Even if it be competent to the High Court [in second appeal] to remit a case for re-hearing on an issue not raised in the pleadings nor even suggested in the Courts below this ought only to be done in exceptional cases for good cause shown and on payment of all cost thrown away (p)

Appeal —No appeal lies under the Code from an order referring issues for trial under this rule (q) Nor does an appeal lie under the Letters Patent (r)

26 [S 567] (1) Such evidence and findings shall form part of the record in the suit, and either party may, within a time to be fixed by the appellate Court, present a memorandum of objections to any finding

Determination of appeal

Where no memorandum of objection is filed—This rule provides that either party may file a memorandum of objection to the findings by the lower Court on the issues referred to it by the appellate Court. It is not to be supposed however that if no objections are filed by either party the appellate Court is absolved from hearing the appeal (s). But the Lahore High Court has held that the Court may in its discretion decline to hear objections if none have been filed (t). Sub r (2) clearly indicates that even if no objections are filed the appellate Court shall proceed to determine the appeal. That is to say even if no objections are filed to the findings the appellate Court is bound to examine the correctness of the findings and to state in its judgment the reasons (r 31) for which it either accepts or rejects the findings (u). It should not accept the findings blindly without examining the evidence on which they are based (v). See notes to r 31. Shall state the reasons for the decision.

Where the appellate Court has heard arguments on some of the issues and has expressed its views thereon and remitted other issues under r 25 it is not bound on the return of findings to hear the case de novo but may confine counsel to argument upon the findings (w).

The appellate Court shall proceed to determine the appeal—When an appellate Court has made an order referring issues for trial under r 25 the return to

1, 27 such order must be made to the same Court and such Court is not competent to transfer the appeal for disposal to another Court (x)

Unnecessary reference—In the case of a unnecessary reference under r 95 can the Court disregard the findings returned? It can if the reference order is of a single Judge and the appeal is heard ultimately by a Bench of two Judges (y) But not otherwise for it is an interlocutory order made with jurisdiction and operative in law until set aside in review (z) If the findings conflict with other findings of fact in the judgment this will not embarrass a Court of first appeal where the entire evidence is examined A Court of second appeal may however be embarrassed and it is therefore preferable not to resort to the rule in second appeal (a) but to remand under the inherent jurisdiction (b)

Second appeal—The provisions of this and the preceding rule apply so far as may be by virtue of O 42 to second appeals Hence the High Court may in second appeal refer issues of fact for trial to the lower appellate Court but when the finding and evidence upon such issues are returned to the High Court the finding is conclusive and it cannot be challenged upon the evidence before the High Court as in first appeal The reason is that second appeals are not allowed on questions of fact The only grounds on which a second appeal is allowed are those mentioned in s 100 and these relate to errors of law or usage having the force of law or a substantial error or defect in procedure which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case on the merits The objections to the findings must therefore be restricted to the limits within which the original pleas in second appeal are confined (c)

Sending back case for revised finding—An appellate Court has no power to send back a case to the lower Court to submit a revised finding on the fact on evidence already recorded Such a course is not warranted by any one of the rules 23 to 26 of this Order (d) But if it does so it is mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99 and if the appellate Court on the revised finding returned to it itself considers the evidence on which it is based the decree will not be set aside in appeal (e).

27 [s 598] (1) The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the appellate Court But if—

the appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced, or witness to be examined

(2) Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced by an appellate Court, the Courts shall record the reason for its admission

When additional evidence may be admitted—Under this rule the admissibility of additional evidence is made to depend not upon the relevancy or materiality to the issue before the Court of the evidence sought to be admitted or upon the fact whether or not the applicants had an opportunity of adducing evidence at some earlier stage but upon whether or not the appellate Court requires the evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause (f) Additional evidence under this rule should not be taken until the appellate Court has examined the evidence on the record and has after such examination come to the conclusion that the evidence as it stands is inherently defective as for instance when the lower Court has omitted to take the evidence of an attesting witness to a mortgage deed (g) Until this is done the appellate Court has no power to admit additional evidence not even if the evidence offered be the evidence of new matter discovered after the Court of first instance had pronounced its judgment As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kesowji's Issur v G I P Ry (h) the legitimate occasion [for the application of the present rule] is when on examining the evidence as it stands some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it This decision seemed to lend support to the view taken in the Calcutta case last quoted that the test of admissibility is the requirement of the Court itself and this construction has often been put upon this rule (i) But in truth sub rule (b) falls into two parts (1) the requirement of the Court and (2) any other substantial cause Kesowji's case dealt with (1) only because (2) was barred by an unsuccessful application for review to the lower Court However a recent decision of the Privy Council makes it clear that the appellate Court has a discretion to admit additional evidence for substantial cause (j)

The power given under this rule should be exercised very sparingly by the Courts and great caution should be exercised in admitting new evidence (k) Additional evidence must not be admitted to enable a plaintiff to make out a fresh case in appeal If cases were remanded for the purposes of allowing parties to make out a new case or to improve their case by calling further evidence there would be no end to litigation (l) An appellant who has ample opportunity of giving evidence in the lower Court and elects not to do so but rests his case on the evidence as it stood ought not to be allowed to give evidence which he could have given below (m) Similarly the appellate Court should not take evidence which the lower Court refused to take as it was tendered after the case was closed (n) or admit a document tendered by a party if having the opportunity of tendering it in the Court below he omitted to do so (o) though as in Sreenani v Secretary of State (p) this may sometimes be permitted on terms as to costs Nor should it allow

r 27 additional evidence to prove the genuineness of a document held by the lower Court to be a fabrication (g) It must however be noted that where additional evidence is taken by the High Court with the assent of both sides it is not open to either party to complain of it (r)

Where the lower Court has refused to admit evidence—An appellate Court should not reverse the decree of the first Court without allowing the decree holder to give evidence which he offered in the first Court and which that Court declined to take (s) The improper rejection of evidence does not justify the reversal of the decree and the appellate Court should in that case act under this rule (t)

Where the appellate Court requires any document to be produced—An appellate Court has no power under this rule to require a document to be produced unless it is required to enable it to pronounce judgment Where judgment could be pronounced in the absence of the document the appellate Court should not allow the document to be produced (u) The word requires means nothing more than needs or finds needful (v)

Where the appellate Court requires a witness to be examined—The appellate Court should not under cl (b) of this rule take additional evidence which impeaches the testimony of a witness called in the Court below unless that witness is also called and given an opportunity to contradict or explain the additional evidence so given otherwise no witness whatever his standing would be safe from adverse judicial comment (w) Where a witness was examined and cross examined in the Court of first instance and there was no gap in the evidence nor any new matter about which it was necessary to examine him and the appellate Judge merely cross examined him on his previous evidence in order to enable him to pronounce judgment it was held that the examination of the witness by the Court was not warranted by the provisions of this rule (x)

Or for any other substantial cause —The cause referred to here need not be ejusdem generis with the causes stated in the earlier part of the rule (y) The expression any other substantial cause confers a wide discretion on the appellate Court to admit additional evidence when the ends of justice require it ( ) It has accordingly been held that the discovery after the filing of the appeal of fresh evidence not known to and available to the appellant after due diligence during the pendency of the proceedings in the first Court is a substantial cause within the meaning of this rule justifying the admission of such evidence in appeal (a) The Privy Council have made this clear in the case of Indrajit v Amar Singh (b) The sole issue in that case was whether a grant comprised certain villages The grantor had leased them prior to the grant and claimed that they were not included in the grant The first Court decided in favour of the grantor as there was no evidence to show that any arrangement had been made by the grantor with reference to the rent payable by the lessee The grantee appealed and during the appeal discovered documents contemporaneously executed by the grantor directing the lessee to pay rents to the grantee and an under lessee to pay his rents to the lessee These documents the High Court of Calcutta on its construction of Kessouj's case held they had no jurisdiction to admit as additional evidence But as to this the Privy Council said —

Both in the case of Sree Manchunder Rey v Gopalchunder Chuckerbutty (c) and Kessouj's Issur v Great Indian Peninsula Railway (d) their Lordships were dealing with the power of the appellate Court to require evidence to be produced for the purpose of enabling the Court to pronounce judgment Those cases did not refer to the right of one or other of the parties to produce evidence which he considered essential to the right determination of the action Under Order 47 rule 1 which reproduces section 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure Act 14 of 1882 a party has a right to apply for a review of judgment to the Court that has decided the case before an appeal has been preferred. The grounds on which such an application may be made are specifically set forth in rule 1 In the present case an appeal has been preferred and a review was therefore out of the question and the respondents took the only and proper course to apply to the High Court which was in possession of the case to admit the additional evidence either under general principles of law or under the specific provisions of rule 27

The reference to the general principles of law somewhat weakens the judgment but it does appear that the grounds stated in O 47 r 1 do constitute other substantial cause (e) In another case Privy Council said that the power to take additional evidence is a power which should be exercised by a Court of Appeal with much caution and only in suits where it is satisfied that in the interests of justice it should be exercised and that such additional evidence when admitted will be evidence which if produced at the trial would have been admissible (f)

Inability to understand the legal issues involved is not substantial cause (g) nor the slackness of the party or his legal advisers (h) The Privy Council refused to allow a party an adjournment to produce the record of a former suit when the absence of this evidence was due to his own remissness (i) If the appellate Court does require a witness not called by inadvertence in the lower Court it is an error of law but one which does not justify interference in revision (j) Again if the party could have applied to the lower Court for an adjournment to call further evidence but does not do so and takes the chance of a judgment in his favour on the evidence at his disposal he will not be allowed to call it in the appellate Court (k)

Recording of reason for admission of additional evidence—The provision requiring an appellate Court to record its reason for admitting additional evidence is merely directory and not imperative Hence the omission to record the reason does not render the evidence inadmissible (l) But if one party is allowed to adduce additional evidence the opposite party should be allowed to call rebutting evidence (m) and when additional evidence was recorded and no reason stated for its admission the suit was remanded with a direction to allow the opposite party to adduce rebutting evidence (n) When the Court after the suit was adjourned for judgment recalled and examined the plaintiff without recording reasons and without giving notice to the other side it was held that it had acted without jurisdiction (o)

1, 30 Second appeal—Except in the case provided in s 103 the High Court is precluded in second appeal, by virtue of the provisions of s 100 from entering into questions of fact. Therefore if the Court of first appeal has admitted additional evidence under this rule the hearing in the Court of second appeal will not for that reason be treated as a first appeal so as to entitle the parties to go into questions of fact (p)

No appeal lies from a refusal by the lower appellate Court to admit fresh evidence under this rule (q). Hence if the lower appellate Court refuses to admit a document as additional evidence in appeal under this rule the High Court cannot interfere in second appeal and hold that such additional evidence ought to have been admitted by the lower appellate Court (r). But in Jetalal v Varayal (s) a case was remanded under the inherent jurisdiction to the first appellate Court with a direction to admit additional evidence.

Privy Council appeal—The rejection of an application under this rule does not give a right of appeal to the Privy Council (t).

28 [S 560] Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced, the appellate Court may either take such evidence, or direct the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, or any other subordinate Court, to take such evidence and to send it when taken to the appellate Court.

It need hardly be stated that where the additional evidence taken by the Court consists of documents they should be exhibited in the case (u). The lower appellate Court resumes its functions as a Court of first appeal and can appoint under s 75 a commissioner for the examination of witnesses (v).

29 [S 570] Where additional evidence is directed or allowed to be taken, the appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined, and record on its proceedings the points so specified.

Judgment in Appeal

30 [S 571] The appellate Court, after hearing the parties or their pleaders and referring to any part of the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, to which reference may be considered necessary, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders.

After hearing the parties or their pleaders—This rule authorizes the Court to pronounce judgment after hearing the parties or their pleaders. Hence a judgment pronounced without hearing the parties or their representatives if they are dead is unauthorized by the Code. Thus where an appellate Court heard and decided an appeal without being aware of the death of the appellant the decree was held to be a nullity (w).

Contents, date and signature of judgment

31 [S 574] The judgment of the appellate Court shall be in writing and shall state—

- (a) the points for determination
- (b) the decision thereon
- (c) the reasons for the decision, and,
- (d) where the decree appealed from is reversed or varied, the relief to which the appellant is entitled,

and shall at the time that it is pronounced be signed and dated by the Judge or by the Judges concurring therein

Shall state the reasons for the decision—The judgment of the appellate Court should state the reasons for the decision. The reason of the rule has been stated to be to afford the litigant parties an opportunity of knowing and understanding the grounds upon which the decision proceeds with a view to enable them to exercise if they see fit and are so advised the right of second appeal conferred by s 100. If an appellate Court could dispose of appeals coming before it in a judgment which does not state the reasons for the decisions the right of second appeal might altogether be neutralized (x). The reason for the decision should be stated not only when the decree of the first Court is varied or set aside but also when it is confirmed (y). If this rule is not observed the proper form of the order to be made by the High Court in second appeal is to set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and send back the case to that Court in order that the appeal may be disposed of according to law (z). This course was adopted where the judgment was appeal dismissed with costs (a) and in another case where the judgment was appeal rejected under s 551 [now O 41 r 11] of the Civil Procedure Code (b). Where the decree of the first Court is confirmed in appeal the Judge of the appellate Court should state his own reasons and should not confine himself to approving of the reasons of the Court of first instance (c). This is because the judgment should show on the face of it that the points in dispute were clearly before the mind of the Judge and that he exercised his own discrimination in deciding them (d). Thus where the judgment was ~ To deal with the grounds of appeal would be simply to repeat the judgment of the District Munsif. I concur with the decision the District Munsif has given on each point. The judgment of the lower Court is confirmed for the reasons therein set forth and this appeal is dismissed with costs the judgment was set aside (e). In the last mentioned case the Court observed. - 31 adoption of the judgment of the Court of first instance cannot be considered as a sufficient compliance with the law. The same was held where the judgment was there is no satisfactory evidence that plaintiff was ever in possession of the land in dispute and the evidence was not discussed in the judgment (f)

If the reasons for the decision are not stated by the appellate Court as fully as they ought to have been but the High Court is satisfied upon the judgment that the Judge of the lower Court had read the evidence and meant to find upon that evidence as a whole the decree of the lower Court will not be interfered with in second appeal. The proper course to be followed in such a case is to require the Judge if still holding office to supplement his judgment by giving in greater details the reasons on which it is based (g)

Shall state the points for determination—The object of the legislature in making it incumbent by this rule on the appellate Court to raise points for determination is to clear up the pleading and focus the attention of the Court and of the parties on the specific and rival contentions of the latter (h). The exact questions which arise in the appeal and require determination must be stated in the judgment. It is not sufficient to state the point to be determined on appeal is whether or not the decision is consistent with the merits of the case. A proposition so roundly worded is no point at all (i).

Form of order—Where there has been a failure by the first appellate Court to comply with the requirements of this rule the proper form of the order to be made by the second appellate Court is to set aside the decree and remand the case to the first appellate Court for disposal according to law. If the Judge of the Court to which the case is remanded is the Judge who heard the appeal in the first instance he need not rehear the appeal unless he is of opinion that he cannot properly dispose of the remanded case without a rehearing. But where the Judge of the Court to which the case is remanded is not the Judge who heard the appeal in the first instance a rehearing is always necessary in order that there may be a compliance with the order of the second appellate Court that the case be disposed of according to law (j). See notes above. Shall state the reasons for the decision.

High Court—Where a suit was decided by a District Court and the decree was confirmed in appeal by the High Court and the High Court did not state in its judgment the reason for its decision. Edge C J on an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the requirements of this rule were not complied with said that the present rule was not intended to apply to cases where the High Court after hearing the judgment of the lower Court and arguments thereon comes to the conclusion that both the judgment and the reasons given by the Court below for its decision are completely satisfactory (k). And the opinion has been expressed by Mahmood J that this rule does not apply at all to judgments of High Courts in second appeal (l). See sec 122.

Appeal under sec 476 Criminal Procedure Code—Appeals under sec 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code are regulated by O 41 and the judgment must comply with this rule (m).

Cases to which rule applies—This rule is new. It is taken for the most part from O 58 r 4 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature in England. The object of the rule is to empower the appellate Court to do complete justice between the parties. O 41 r 4 and this rule gives the Court ample power to make the order appropriate to the ends of justice. Under the former rule upon an appeal by one of the parties on a ground common to all the decrees may be varied in favour of all under the latter rule the Court has power to make the proper decree notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and such power may be exercised in favour of all or any of the parties even though they may not have filed an appeal or objection (p). The illustration to the rule indicates a type of case for which provision is intended to be made. The following are further instances —

(1) A sues B and C for contribution. A decree is passed against B but as against C the suit is dismissed. B appeals making A alone respondent to the appeal. A does not appeal from the decree dismissing the suit as against C. If the appellate Court is of opinion that C is liable and not B it may under r 20 direct that C be added as a respondent as being a person interested in the result of the appeal and may under the present rule alter the decree so as to make C liable though no appeal was preferred by A from the dismissal of the suit against C. This is in accordance

(2) A suit is brought on behalf of the public for (1) a declaration that the public are entitled to use certain locks on a certain river without payment of tolls and (?) a declaration that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair A decree is passed for the plaintiff awarding the relief as to the use of the locks without payment of tolls but declaring that the defendant is under no obligation to repair the locks The defendant appeals The plaintiff neither files a cross appeal nor objections The appellate Court finds that the public are not entitled to use the locks without payment of tolls to the defendant At the same time it finds that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair The appellate Court has power while declaring by its decree that the public are liable to pay tolls also to declare that the defendant is liable to keep the locks in repair notwithstanding that no appeal or objection was taken to that part of the decree by the plaintiff (i)

(3) Plaintiff sued for ejectment of tenants in possession of land that he had purchased and in the alternative for compensation against his vendor The first Court dismissed the suit against the tenants and awarded compensation against the vendor The plaintiff did not appeal but the vendor appealed and established that he had conveyed a good title to the plaintiff The Court of appeal reversed the decree for compensation and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession and mesne profits against the tenants (v)

It does constantly occur where some persons appeal and others do not that the Court is put in a position of having to make impossible or contradictory or unworkable orders Accordingly it has been given power to make a decree in favour of persons who have not even approached it This power may be exercised by the Court in favour of any of the parties who may not have filed any appeal or objection (u) The appellate Court may under this rule to vary the decree of the lower Court though the variation may benefit a defendant who has not appealed from the decree (x) Thus when plaintiff's claim was decreed partly against A and partly against B and A appealed and B did not the appellate Court under this rule made a decree exempting B and making A liable for the whole amount (y) The power is however discretionary In a recent Allahabad case (z) a mother and son sued as legal representatives of a reversionary heir to recover property and the suit was decreed in favour of the son but dismissed as regards the mother The mother did not appeal as she was satisfied with a decree in favour of the son. On appeal to the High Court the son's suit was dismissed on the ground that he was a son by a former marriage. The effect of the decision was that the mother was entitled but the Court refused to exercise its power under this rule. The Allahabad High Court has held that when there is a common defence a Court of appeal may dismiss a suit as against a defendant who has not appealed (a) but not if there is no common ground of defence (b). In a Patna Case (c) the plaintiff obtained a decree in the first Court against A, B and C for contribution. A alone appealed and the High Court under this rule dismissed the suit not only against A but against B and C as well. The plaintiff appealed and the Privy Council restored the decree of the first Court. In execution proceedings it was contended that this had not the effect of reviving the decree against B and C which had become time barred. But it was held that as O 41 r 33 enables an appellate Court to deal with the entire decree although the appeal may be as to part only, the entire decree becomes the subject matter of the appeal even when the appeal is from part of the decree and by some only of the parties so that the final decree for purposes of limitation under Article 182 (2) was the decree of the Privy Council and that the application for execution was therefore within time. Similarly the appellate Court has power under this rule to make an order for extension of time for making an award in a matter governed by the Indian Arbitration Act 1899 (d).

Cases to which rule does not apply—A sues B to recover rent Rs 200. A decree is passed in favour of A for Rs 95 only. A appeals against the disallowance of the balance of the amount claimed. B neither files a cross appeal nor objections against the decree. The appellate Court finds that nothing is due to A from B. The appellate Court has no power to dismiss A's claim in toto. If B was aggrieved by the decree against him for Rs 95 he ought to have appealed or filed objections (e). Again the rule does not apply when the decree is really a combination of several decrees against several defendants (f). Mukerji J on a review of all the cases said the rule should be cautiously applied and only in cases where but for recourse to it the ends of justice would be defeated (g). The High Court of Allahabad has held that the Court has no power under this rule to pass a decree against a person who is not a party to the appeal (h).

Privy Council appeal—In an appeal to Privy Council relief will not be given under this rule to a party who has not appealed to the High Court. A sued B and B's agent C for damages for breach of two contracts. The first Court passed a decree against B in respect of both contracts and as against C made an order for costs only. A did not appeal against the dismissal of the suit as against C but both B and C appealed. The High Court modified the decree making B liable only as to one contract and allowed C's appeal. A appealed to Privy Council making both B and C respondents and contended that C was liable as regards the contract as to which the High Court had exonerated B. But their Lordships said that the appeal against C was an appeal direct from the trial Judge which was not allowable (i).

Such other decree as the case may require.—The power of the appellate Court is not limited to determining the question whether the original Court was right according to the law in force at the date of its judgment: it may pass such decree as it in accordance with any later enactment which came into operation subsequent to such date (j).

Remand—A sues B for three sums of money X, Y and Z. A claim is allowed as to items X and Y but disallowed as to item Z. A appeals from the decree as to item Z. B appeals from the decree as to items X and Y. The appellate Court dismisses A's appeal, and allows B's appeal as to item Y only with the result that item Y is decreed in A's favour. A then appeals to the High Court as to items X and Z. The High Court has power under this rule to remand the whole case for determination on the merits. The effect of such an order is to empower the lower Court to reopen the case even as to item Y which was decided by the lower appellate Court in favour of A and from which decision B had not preferred an appeal to the High Court (k).

Proviso—The proviso was added by Act 9 of 1922. Its effect is that the appellate Court cannot allow a claim for compensatory costs which has been disallowed by the original Court.

ORDER XLIII

Appeals from Orders

- 1 1 [ S 588 ] An appeal shall lie from the following orders under the provisions of section 104, namely —

Appeal from orders

- (a) an order under rule 10 of Order VII returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court,
- (b) an order under rule 10 of Order VIII pronouncing judgment against a party,
- (c) an order under rule 9 of Order IX rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit,
- (d) an order under rule 13 of Order IX rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte,
- (e) an order under rule 4 of Order X pronouncing judgment against a party,
- (f) an order under rule 21 of Order XI,
- (g) an order under rule 10 of Order XVI for the attachment of property,
- (h) an order under rule 20 of Order XVI pronouncing judgment against a party,
- (i) an order under rule 34 of Order XXI on an objection to the draft of a document or of an endorsement,

- (j) an order under rule 72 or rule 92 of Order XXI O 4 setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale,
- (k) an order under rule 9 of Order XXII refusing to set aside the abatement or dismissal of a suit,
- (l) an order under rule 10 of Order XXII giving or refusing to give leave,
- (m) an order under rule 3 of Order XXIII recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction,
- (n) an order under rule 2 of Order XXV rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit,
- (o) an order under rule 2, 4 or 7 of Order XXXIV refusing to extend the time for the payment of mortgage money,
- (p) orders in interpleader suits under rule 3, rule 4, or rule 6 of Order XXXV,
- (q) an order under rule 2, rule 3 or rule 6 of Order XXXVIII,
- (r) an order under rule 1, rule 2, rule 4, or rule 10 of Order XXXIX,
- (s) an order under rule 1 or rule 4 of Order XL,
- (t) an order of refusal under rule 19 of Order XLI to re admit, or under rule 21 of Order XLI to re hear an appeal,
- (u) an order under rule 23 of Order XLI remanding a case, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court,
- (v) an order made by any Court other than a High Court refusing the grant of a certificate under rule 6 of Order XLV,
- (w) an order under rule 4 of Order XLVII granting an application for review

Section 104—This rule forms part of s. 104 [see s. 104 sub s. (1) cl. (i)]. The result is that no second appeal lies from an order passed in an appeal preferred under this rule (r)

Clause (a) Order returning plaint to be presented to the proper Court—Where an order is made by the first Court of appeal returning a plaint under O 7 r 10 by virtue of the powers conferred on it by s 107 the order is appealable under this clause (a) and an appeal will lie to the High Court under s 106 (t). But no appeal lies from an order of an appellate Court returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court. The terms of cl (a) of this rule do not cover such a case nor can the reading of O 7 r 10 with s 107 justify the interpolation of the words memorandum of appeal after the word plaint in cl (a) of the present rule (u).

Clause (c)—This clause is amended by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act 1930 by substituting the word and figures 2 4 or 7 for 4 or 7.

Clause (u) Order of remand—Under s 104 and O 43 an appeal lies only if an order of remand has been passed under O 41 r 23 above (t).

Other clauses—These have already been considered in their proper places.

2 [S 590] The rules of Order XLI shall apply, so far as may be, to appeals from orders

See s 108 cl. (b).

ORDER XLIV

Pauper Appeals

1 [S 592] Any person entitled to prefer an appeal who is unable to pay the fee required for the memorandum of appeal, may present an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal, and may be allowed to appeal as a pauper, subject, in all matters, including the presentation of such application, to the provisions relating to suits by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable.

Who may appeal as pauper
Provided that the Court shall reject the application unless, upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree appealed from, it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust.

Procedure on application for admission of appeal
Alteration in the rule—The words in all matters including the presentation of such application in the first paragraph are new. See notes below under those words.

Unable to pay the fee.—In a Madras case (w) the petitioner had obtained a decree for maintenance and sought to appeal in forma pauperis for higher maintenance but the defendant paid Rs 571 arrears of maintenance into Court to her credit and the petition was dismissed on the ground that she had sufficient means to pay the Court fee on the memorandum of appeal. See however note under O 33 r 1. Subject matter of the suit.

In all matters including the presentation of such application — The present rule provides that the provision relating to suits by paupers shall apply so far as may be to appeals by paupers. Therefore the application referred to in this rule for leave to appeal as a pauper must be presented by the applicant in person just as an application for leave to sue as a pauper [See O 33 r 3]. This is now made clear by the addition of the words in all matters including the presentation of such application. In the absence of these words in the old section it was held by the Madras High Court that the rule as to the presentation of a pauper's petition (now contained in O 33 r 3) did not apply to pauper appeals (x). The Madras decision is no longer law.

Subject to the provision relating to suits by paupers — A sues B to recover certain properties as the heir of her deceased husband. The suit is dismissed. A applies for leave to appeal as a pauper. It is found on inquiry that A had before instituting the suit entered into an agreement falling within the terms of O 33 r 3 (d) which would have entitled A to sue as a pauper. The appellate Court should under these circumstances refuse leave to A to appeal as a pauper (y).

Application and memorandum of appeal — This rule requires two separate documents to be presented — a memorandum of appeal and an application for leave to appeal as a pauper. When the Judge disposes of the pauper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. He may still treat it as an existing appeal if the appellant desires to pay the full court fees on the appeal and to continue it as an ordinary appeal. The Judge is under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal when he refuses the appellant leave to appeal as a pauper (z). Following this reasoning it has been held by the High Court of Madras that where an application for leave to sue as a pauper is rejected owing to the memorandum of appeal which accompanied it being unstamped the rejection of the application does not carry with it the rejection of the memorandum of appeal. The result is that if the pauper applies for time to pay the court fee and time is granted to him [ 149] and the court fee is paid within the time fixed by the Court the appeal must be held to be in time though the court fee may have been paid after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for filing the appeal (a).

Proviso to the rule — The proviso is mandatory (b) and is a necessary safeguard introduced by the legislature for the benefit of litigants who find themselves opposed by paupers. To provide a safeguard against the proviso being overlooked the Judge admitting a pauper appeal should express and record briefly the reasons on which the leave proceeds (c). The proviso is of course not applicable unless the appeal is in forma pauperis (d). After issue of notice to the respondent and the Government Pleader it is no longer open to the Court to examine the question whether the decree is contrary to law or some usage having the force of law or is otherwise unjust or erroneous (e).

Appeal — No appeal lies under the Code from an order refusing leave to appeal as a pauper. It was held in a Madras case that no appeal lies from such an order under

Power of High Court to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in forma pauperis.—It has recently been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (l) Patna (l) and Madras (m) that O 41 r 1 does not apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council and that the High Court has no power to grant leave to appeal in forma pauperis to His Majesty in Council. The point arose in an earlier Calcutta case but it was not decided (n). In a still earlier case it was said that the usual security for costs must be given (o).

3 [ S 600 ] (1) Every petition shall state the grounds of appeal and pray for a certificate either that, as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of section 110, or that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council

(2) Upon receipt of such petition, the Court shall direct notice to be served on the opposite party to show cause why the said certificate should not be granted.

Alteration in the rule—In sub rule (2) the word shall has been substituted for the word may

Petition—A petition for a certificate which was dropped when the judgment complained of was reversed on review was treated as revived when the review was held incompetent by the Privy Council (p)

Certificate—The certificate of leave to appeal and not the order for such certificate is the document which the Judicial Committee are bound to consider and act upon in determining whether leave to appeal has been properly granted or not and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify that leave they ought to hold that leave has not properly been given (g) The certificate must make plain upon the face of it that the discretion conferred upon the High Court was invoked and exercised (r) The assent of the respondent to the issue of a certificate will not make it effective if the conditions on which it should be issued are not complied with (s)

Certificate as to fitness—Where a case fulfils the requirements of a 110 the petitioner is entitled to a certificate as of right in the ordinary course of procedure. When it does not—that is where the matter is under the appealable value or is not measurable by money—the granting of the certificate is entirely in the discretion of the Court. (1) In the former case the High Court should certify the sufficiency of the amount for appeal to the Privy Council and should also certify when the decision of the lower Court is affirmed that the appeal involves a question of law. been improperly valued or excluded or that there is some fundamental principle which renders the valuation unsound. On the mere question of the value of admitted items the Committee will not interfere nor will they allow a party to contend that the valuation has been arrived at on an erroneous principle unless he has raised that contention by his printed case (u). In the latter case it is enough if the certificate states that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council (v). Before coming to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal in a matter which is under the appealable value or not measurable by money the party should first apply to the Court below for a certificate under this rule and s 109 cl. (g) that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council otherwise special leave to appeal will not be granted by the Committee except in special cases (w). See notes to s 109 Certificate as to fitness and not s to s 110 under sub head Where the matter is under the appealable value or is not capable of valuation.

Procedure—If the petitioner does not prosecute his petition it may be struck off for non prosecution (x).

Appeal—An order granting a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 10 of the Letters Patent and no appeal lies from such an order (y). Nor does an appeal lie under that clause from an order refusing an application for leave to the Privy Council where the refusal is based on the ground that the case did not fulfil the requirements of s 110 above (z).

Form—For form of notice under sub r. (-) see App G form no. 1.

4 [New] For the purposes of pecuniary valuation, suits involving substantially the same questions for determination and decided by the same judgment may be consolidated, but suits decided by separate judgment shall not be consolidated, notwithstanding that they involve substantially the same question for determination.

Consolidation of suits

Consolidation of suits—This rule is new. In the absence of any such rule in the Code of 1852 it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that suits involving substantially the same questions for determination could be consolidated for the purpose of reaching the pecuniary limit necessary for an appeal if the property affected by the suits was the same notwithstanding that the suits were decided by separate judgments (a). According to the Calcutta decisions however such consolidation is not permissible unless the suits besides involving the same question for determination were decided by the same judgment (b). The Bombay High Court has allowed consolidation of suits decided by separate judgments when the point involved was the same and the parties had agreed that the evidence in one suit should be treated as evidence in the others and the reasons in the judgments in the main suit were adopted in the others (c). The present rule gives effect to the Calcutta rulings (d). It need hardly

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order made by any Court other than a High Court refusing the grant of a certificate under this rule [O 43 r 1 cl (v)]

7 [S 602] (1) Where the certificate is granted, the applicant shall, within ninety days or such further period, not exceeding sixty days, as the Court may upon cause shown allow, from the date of the decree complained of, or within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate, whichever is the later date,—

(a) furnish security in cash or in Government securities for the costs of the respondent, and

(b) deposit the amount required to defray the expense of translating, transcribing, indexing and transmitting to His Majesty in Council a correct copy of the whole record of the suit, except—

(1) formal documents directed to be excluded by any order of His Majesty in Council in force for the time being,

(2) papers which the parties agree to exclude,

(3) accounts, or portions of accounts, which the officer empowered by the Court for that purpose considers unnecessary, and which the parties have not specifically asked to be included, and

(4) such other documents as the High Court may direct to be excluded

Provided that the Court at the time granting the certificate may, after hearing any opposite party who appears, order on the ground of special hardship that some other form of security may be furnished

Provided further, that no adjournment shall be granted to an opposite party to contest the nature of such security

(2) Where the applicant prefers to print in India the copy of the record, except as aforesaid, he shall also within the time mentioned in sub rule (1) deposit the amount required to defray the expense of printing such copy

Rule amended—The italicized words were added into this rule by Act 26 of 1920 In sub rule (1) the words originally were within six months The period is now reduced to 90 days See notes below Extension of time The provisions were also added by the same Act

Date of the decree—This means the date on which the decree is pronounced not that on which it is signed (l)

Extension of time—It has been held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the High Court may extend the time allowed for giving the security and making the deposit provided there are cogent reasons for doing so (m) According to the Madras High Court the cogent reasons must be such as would lead the Court to believe that the party was diligent in due time to be prepared to lodge the deposit within the limited period and that he was prevented from doing so not owing to the absence and difficulty of getting funds but owing to some circumstances accidental or otherwise over which he had no control or owing to mistake which the Court would consider not unreasonable or caused by negligence (n) On the other hand it has been held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that poverty is a cogent reason for extending the time if the amount required is large and the applicant has deposited a substantial portion of the amount within the time originally allowed (o) Prior to Act 26 of 1920 it was the uniform practice to extend time on good cause shown But the object of the amending Act was to expedite Privy Council appeals and the restrictive words used limit the Court's discretion so that the Court can in no case grant an extension of more than sixty days (p) The Allahabad High Court has held that the shorter period allowed by the amending Act does not apply when the decree was passed before the Act came into force (q) The Bombay High Court has however held that under rule 9 of the Privy Council Rules 1920 an extension can be granted (r)

Security in case of consolidated appeal—Where two or more appeals are consolidated for purposes of pecuniary valuation the security required by this rule is the whole security which the appellants together have to furnish and not only a part of it. Therefore if two or more appeals are consolidated and some sets of appellants furnish the security required from them but others do not the consolidated appeal cannot be admitted under r 8 below (s)

Records—The Privy Council have strongly condemned the inclusion in the record of unnecessary papers and disallowed the costs occasioned thereby (t)

Delay—If delay in the preparation of the record is due to the inaction of the appellant it seems that the appeal may be certified as not effectually prosecuted (u)

Appeal—No appeal lies under cl 15 of the Charter from an order refusing to extend the time for furnishing security for costs and directing the appeal to be struck off (v)

Alterations in the rule —

1 The words admitting the appeal which occurred in the first paragraph of the old section after the word Court have been omitted. Those words gave rise to a conflict of decisions on the question whether the Court had power under the old section to stay the execution of the decree appealed from after a petition had been presented for leave to appeal but before the appeal was admitted. It was held by the High Court of Bombay that the Court had the power (x). On other hand it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the Court had no such power the decision being based on the ground that the words the Court admitting the appeal indicated that no stay could be granted until the appeal was admitted (y). The words admitting the appeal have been omitted to make it clear that the power conferred by this rule may be exercised at any time after the presenting of the petition and even before the grant of a certificate for the admission of the appeal.

Another result of the omission of the words admitting the appeal after the word Court is to invest the High Court with power to stay execution notwithstanding that an appeal has been admitted by special leave of His Majesty in Council ( ). Under the Code of 1882 it was held that since the powers conferred by the corresponding s 603 could only be exercised by the Court admitting the appeal the High Court had no power to stay execution where the appeal was admitted by special leave of His Majesty in Council (a).

It seems unnecessary to add that a District Court cannot stay execution and that O 41 does not apply (b).

2 The words by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise at the end of cl. (d) are new.

The Court —The Court referred to in this rule and r 14 is the High Court (c).

Stay of execution before grant of certificate —See notes above. Alterations in the rule. No 1.

Stay of execution in view of an application for special leave to appeal —The High Court has an inherent power to make an order for stay of execution in view of an application by the judgment debtor to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (d).

Clause (c) —If the Court fixes a time for furnishing security as a condition of stay of execution it is advisable that the time for tender of security should be specified with further directions for the inquiry as to its sufficiency (f) Proceedings for final decree for partition after a preliminary decree has been passed are not execution proceedings which can be stayed under this rule (g)

Security after execution —The Court has power to require security to be given under this rule even after the decree has been executed wholly or in part (h) It has also the power to stay further execution after the decree has been partially executed (i)

Stay of execution where appeal admitted by special leave —See notes above Alterations in the rule No 1 second paragraph

Appointment of receiver where appeal admitted by special leave —The High Court has power to appoint a receiver under cl (d) notwithstanding that the appeal was admitted by special leave of His Majesty in Council (j)

Practice —Applications of the character mentioned in this rule ought always to be made in the first instance at any rate to the Court in India which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the peculiar case and has knowledge of details which the Judicial Committee cannot possess on an interlocutory application (k) If the application is refused by the High Court and the Judicial Committee is of opinion that the application ought to have been granted it may grant a stay of execution But more than this it will not do for instance it will not appoint a receiver of the property under attachment nor take the security referred to in cls (b) and (c) of sub rule (2) In such cases the Judicial Committee will grant leave to the applicant to apply to the High Court with an intimation of its opinion As the order is that of the King in Council the High Court is bound to take notice of it and to govern itself accordingly (l)

Appeal —No appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order refusing to stay execution pending appeal to the Privy Council (m)

- (b) if the original security was furnished by the respondent, the Court shall, so far as may be practicable, stay the further execution of the decree, and restore the parties to the position in which they respectively were when the security which appears inadequate was furnished, or give such direction respecting the subject matter of the appeal as it thinks fit

The Court —See notes under the same head to r 13 above

15 [S 610] (1) Whoever desires to obtain execution of any order of His Majesty in Council shall apply by petition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree passed or order made in appeal and sought to be executed, to the Court from which the appeal to His Majesty was preferred

Procedure to enforce orders of His Majesty
in Council

(2) Such Court shall transmit the order of His Majesty in Council to the Court which passed the first decree appealed from, or to such other Court as His Majesty in Council by such order may direct, and shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the execution of the same, and the Court to which the said order is so transmitted shall execute it accordingly, in the manner and according to the provisions applicable to the execution of its original decrees

(3) When any monies expressed to be payable in British currency are payable in India under such order, the amount so payable shall be estimated according to the rate of exchange for the time being fixed at the date of the making of the order by the Secretary of State for India in Council with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the adjustment of financial transactions between the Imperial and the Indian Governments

(4) Unless His Majesty in Council is pleased otherwise to direct no order of His Majesty in Council shall be inoperative on the ground that no notice has been served on or given to the legal representative of any deceased opposite party or deceased respondent in a case where such opposite party or respondent did not appear either at the hearing in the Court whose decree was complained of or at any proceedings subsequent to the decree of that Court, but such order shall have the same force and effect as if it had been made before the death took place

Alterations in the rule—Paragraphs 3 and 4 of the old section which related to the enforcement of the liability of a surety for the costs of the respondents have been omitted in view of the general rule now laid down in s 140. Para 4 was added by Act 20 of 1900 in order to prevent delays in the disposal of Privy Council appeals

Jurisdiction of Patna High Court—The Patna High Court has no jurisdiction to execute an order of His Majesty in Council passed in an appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court on appeal from a subordinate Court in Bihar. The application for execution of such an order should be made to the Calcutta High Court (n)

Whoever desires to obtain execution—It may be that where a decree has been passed in favour of a number of persons jointly an application under this rule by one or more of them would be sufficient to entitle all of them to apply for execution in the Court below. But it is not so where several persons are by a decree declared entitled to separate specific shares say of an equal share in which case each person obtains by the decree a right to a separate share. In such a case no single plaintiff is entitled to execute the decree on behalf of all the plaintiffs from which it follows that an application under sub r (1) by some of the plaintiffs does not entitle all of them to apply under sub r (2) for execution to the Court to which the order of His Majesty in Council is sent for execution under that sub rule (o)

Functions of the High Court under this rule—The act of the High Court in receiving and filing orders of His Majesty in Council under this rule is a purely ministerial function. The High Court therefore has no power under this rule to discuss the effect of the order of His Majesty in Council on an application to file the order. If the order is impeached as erroneous the proper course for the party aggrieved by the order is to apply to His Majesty in Council to make the necessary alteration or modification in the order (p)

Execution.—The word execution includes restitution as described in s 144. A person therefore who desires to obtain execution though it be by way of restitution must apply in the first instance to the Court indicated by this rule (q). The provisions of this rule are mandatory so that if the petition is presented to a different Court the execution application is liable to be dismissed (r)

Application for execution of order of His Majesty in Council by assignee of order—Where an order of His Majesty in Council is transmitted by the High Court for execution under sub r (2) to the Court which passed the first decree

Enforcement of liability of surety—A obtains a decree against B in a High Court for possession of certain immovable property B appeals to the Privy Council and C stands surety for A as costs of the appeal [r 7 sub r 1 cl (a)] If the appeal is dismissed with costs A may proceed against C for costs by an application for execution [s 145]

Assuming in the case put above that A applies for execution of the decree and that possession of the property is delivered to him on D standing surety for re delivery of the property to B and for the payment of mesne profits in the event of B's appeal being successful [r 13 sub r (2) cl (b)] and that the Privy Council allows B's appeal and reverses the decree of the High Court in that event if A fails to re deliver the property or to pay the mesne profits to B B may proceed against D by an application for execution [s 145] (t)

Restitution—A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property Possession of the property is delivered to him in execution The decree is then set aside in appeal to the Privy Council Pending the appeal to the Privy Council the property is sold in execution of a decree obtained by C against A and it is purchased by P B is entitled on reversal of the decree by the Privy Council to restitution of the property as against P the latter being a representative of A within the meaning of s 47 (u) The Patna High Court considers that proceedings for restitution are not proceedings in execution and so in Patna applications for restitution consequent on a Privy Council decree are not made under this rule to the High Court but to the trial Court (v) The Allahabad High Court treats such an application as one to enforce an Order in Council and as subject as regards limitation to art 143 of the Limitation Act (w) See note under s 144 Against whom restitution may be claimed and whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution

Mesne profits—Where a party is dispossessed of land in pursuance of a decree of the High Court and the decree is reversed in appeal to the Privy Council he is entitled not only to restoration of the land, but to mesne profits during the period of dispossession though the order of His Majesty in Council may be silent as to such profits (x) See s 144

Rate of exchange—The Court have differed on the question whether the words for the time being refer to the rate of exchange at the date of the passing of the order or to that current when the amount is realised The former view is held by the Calcutta High Court (y) the latter by the Allahabad High Court (z)

Interest on costs—Where interest on costs is not allowed in the order of His Majesty in Council such interest cannot be given by any Court in this country (a)

(d) Forster v. Secretary of State (19) 74 J.L.

Letters Patent appeal—An appeal lies under cl 1 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge of a High Court refusing to transmit for execution the order of His Majesty in Council as provided by sub rule (2) of this rule (b)

Limitation—An application for execution under this rule is governed by Art 183 of the Limitation Act 1908 (c)

Dismissal of appeal for want of prosecution—Where an appeal is preferred to the Privy Council from the decree of a High Court but the appeal is dismissed for want of prosecution the order of His Majesty in Council does not amount to a decree at all for purposes of limitation or for any other purpose. Such an order does not deal judicially with the matter of the suit but merely recognizes authoritatively that the appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him and that therefore he is in the same position as if he had not appealed at all (d)

16 [S 611] The orders made by the Court which executes the order of His Majesty in Council, relating to such execution, shall be appealable in the same manner and subject to the same rules as the orders of such Court relating to the execution of its own decrees

ORDER XLVI

Reference

1 [S 617] Where, before or on the hearing of a suit or an appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal, or where, in the execution of any such decree, any question of law or usage having the force of law arises, on which the Court trying the suit or appeal, or executing the decree, entertains reasonable doubt, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties, draw up a statement of the facts of the case and the point on which doubt is entertained, and refer such statement with its own opinion on the point for the decision of the High Court

Alterations in the rule—

- 1 The words is not subject to appeal have been substituted for the word final as the expression final decree is now used in this Code in contradistinction to a preliminary decree

- r 1 2 The words or the construction of a document which construction may affect the merits which occurred in the old section after the words having the force of law have been omitted as they are sufficiently covered by the power to refer any question of law

Hearing of a suit or appeal—A reference can be made to the High Court under this rule only in a suit or an appeal in a suit and not in every matter before the Court in which a point arises on which the Court entertains reasonable doubt (e) Thus where a pleader was fined Rs. 25 by a Subordinate Judge for refusing to act on behalf of his client after receipt of retaining fee and on appeal the District Judge referred the matter to the High Court under this rule it was held that no reference could properly be made under this rule as there was no suit or appeal in a suit (f) Nor can any reference be made in a proceeding other than a suit or an appeal in a suit even by virtue of the provisions of s. 141 above (g) See notes to s. 141 The procedure provided in this Code etc

Decree not subject to appeal—This rule does not authorize a reference to the High Court except in a suit or appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal. Therefore no reference can be made to the High Court in a matter in which an appeal lies for in appealable cases a remedy to correct possible error is provided by the appeal. It is only when a decree is not subject to appeal that a reference can be made under this rule (h) In Pamphul v. Durga (i) a Munsif being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to entertain a particular suit returned the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. On appeal the District Judge referred the matter to the High Court. The High Court held that the order of the Munsif returning the plaint being an appealable order (O. 43 r. 1 cl. (a)) the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the reference. On the same ground it is held that there could be no reference under this rule in a matter of probate and that an order made by a District Judge on an application for probate being appealable it cannot be referred for the opinion of the High Court under this rule though when referred the High Court may deal with the case as a Court of concurrent jurisdiction under s. 204 of the Indian Succession Act (j)

Jurisdiction—A Judge who has no jurisdiction to hear a suit or an appeal has no jurisdiction to make a reference before or at the hearing of such suit or appeal (k)

Reasonable doubt—A reference under this rule can only be made when a Judge entertains a reasonable doubt on a question of law or usage having the force of law. A Judge cannot or lawfully entertain a reasonable doubt on a point clearly decided by the rulings of the High Court to which he is subordinate unless the authority of the decision can be questioned by virtue of anything said or decided in the Privy Council (l). If the Court has no reasonable doubt it should not make a reference merely because it is asked to make one (m)

2 [S 618] The Court may either stay the proceedings or proceed in the case notwithstanding such reference and may pass a decree or make an order contingent upon the decision of the High Court on the point referred,

but no decree or order shall be executed in any case in which such reference is made until the receipt of a copy of the judgment of the High Court upon the reference

3 [S 619] The High Court, after hearing the parties if they appear and desire to be heard, shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy of its judgment with the signature of the Registrar, to the Court by which reference was made, and such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court

Such Court shall proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court — In Jule & Co v Mahomed Hossein (n) the Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs contingent on the opinion of the High Court. The High Court held that upon the case presented by the plaintiffs they could not recover. The judgment of the High Court was transmitted to the Small Cause Court and the Small Cause Judge instead of entering judgment for the defendants allowed the suit to be withdrawn by the plaintiffs with liberty to bring a fresh suit [O 23 r 1]. Upon a petition for revision it was held by the High Court that the Small Cause Court was bound on receipt of the decision of the High Court to dispose of the case in conformity with that decision and to enter judgment for the defendants and that the order allowing the plaintiffs to withdraw from the suit was

(2) On receiving the record and statement, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the suit or to return the plaint for presentation to such other Court as it may in its order declare to be competent to take cognizance of the suit

At any time before judgment—A reference under this rule can only be made before judgment (o)

7 [S 646 B] (1) Where it appears to a District Court that a Court subordinate thereto has, by reason of erroneously holding a suit to be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or not to be so cognizable, failed to exercise

Power to District Court to submit for revision proceedings had under mistake as to jurisdiction in small causes a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or exercised a jurisdiction not so vested, the District Court may, and if required by a party shall, submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for considering the opinion of the subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous

(2) On receiving the record and statement the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit

(3) With respect to any proceedings subsequent to decree in any case submitted to the High Court under this rule the High Court may make such order as in the circumstance appears to it to be just and proper

(4) A Court subordinate to a District Court shall comply with any requisition which the District Court may make for any record or information for the purposes of this rule

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1837 sec 16—Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act runs as follows Save as expressly provided by this Act or by any other enactment for the time being in force a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable

If required by a party shall—It has been held by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta that a District Court is bound to make a reference under this rule if one of the parties requires it to do so (p) On the other hand the Allahabad High Court has held that the word shall is not mandatory but merely directory and that a District Court should not make a reference under this rule unless it is satisfied that a Court subordinate thereto has come to an erroneous finding on a point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it (g)

Statement of reasons—Where a reference is made to the High Courts under this rule the District Court which makes the reference should state its reasons for considering the opinion of the subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous (r)

Powers of High Court under this rule—There is a conflict of decisions as to the powers of the High Court under this rule as will be seen from the cases considered below —

Illustration

A suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court is tried by a District Munsif on the original side without objection to his jurisdiction and a decree is passed for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals to the District Court making no reference to the question of jurisdiction in his grounds of appeal. The District Court reverses the decree passed by the Munsif. The plaintiff applies to the High Court under s. 115 for a revision of the decision of the District Court. It is clear that the suit being one of a nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain it under his ordinary jurisdiction having regard to the provisions of section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act set forth above. Nor had the District Court jurisdiction to entertain the appeal from the decree in such a suit. What order should the High Court make assuming of course that the suit was one of a nature cognisable by a Small Cause Court and which of the following courses should it adopt?—

- (1) Should the High Court set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court?
- (2) Or has it power to consider the case on the merits and to decline to interfere in the matter even though in strict law the suit should have been tried under a different procedure?
- (3) Or should it not set aside the decree of the District Court as having been made without jurisdiction and then dispose of the case on its merits leaving the decree passed by the Munsif to stand or not as may in its discretion appear best?

The first course was adopted by White C.J. in a Madras case where the learned Judge observed that there was no alternative but to adopt that course (s).

The second course was adopted by the High Court of Calcutta in the undermentioned cases (t) where the Court declined to interfere on the ground that they had a complete discretion in the matter.

The third course was adopted in a recent case by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (u). The full Bench held dissenting from the Calcutta decisions cited above and overruling an earlier Madras case (v) in which the Calcutta decision was followed that the decree of the District Judge should be set aside as having been passed without jurisdiction. That decree was accordingly set aside and the decree passed by the Munsif was restored. The same course was adopted in a Bombay case (w).

As regards the Allahabad High Court it declined to interfere in one case on the ground that the present rule did not apply unless there was an erroneous holding as to jurisdiction and that could not occur if no objection to jurisdiction was taken by either

ORDER XLVII

Review

1 Application for review of judgment 1 [S 623] (1) Any person considering himself aggrieved—

- (a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred,
- (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed, or
- (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order

(2) A party who is not appealing from a decree or order may apply for a review of judgment notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal by some other party except where the ground of such appeal is common to the applicant and the appellant or when being respondent, he can present to the appellate Court the case on which he applies for the review

Review under the Code of 1859 and the Code of 1877—Under the Code of 1859 s 376 an application for review could be entertained on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which was not within his [applicant's] knowledge or could not be adduced by him at the time when such decree was passed or for any other good and sufficient reason Under the Code of 1877, s 623 an application for review could be entertained on the ground of discovery of new and important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence was not within his [applicant's] knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record or for any other sufficient reason Sec 603 of the Code of 1882 is in this respect the same as s 623 of the Code of 1877 The present rule is a reproduction of s 623 of the Code of 1892

In what cases a party may apply for a review—A party aggrieved by a decree or a decision specified in clause (a) (b) or (c) of sub rule (1) [see s 114] may apply for a review in any of the following cases—

- I on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence was not within the knowledge of the party or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made or
- II on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record
- III for any other sufficient reason

Ex parte decree or order—A party aggrieved may apply for a review of an ex parte decree or order ( ) and if the case falls within this rule it is no objection that an application under O 9 r 13 could have been made and that it is barred by limitation (a) See notes under O 9 r 13 and O 41 r 19 The Court has jurisdiction to review an ex parte order for use of writ for delivery of possession and to recall the writ (b)

Miscellaneous proceedings—The provisions of the Code as to review apply to proceedings under the Indian Succession Act and an order granting letters of administration is open to review (c)

Order on application—Where a party aggrieved by a decree applies for review the application may either be granted or rejected (r 4 below)

If the application is rejected the case ends there and the parties are relegated to the old decree The order rejecting the application is final and no appeal lies therefrom (r 7) but the party aggrieved may appeal from the old decree

If the application is admitted the case is reheard and it may result in a repetition of the decree or in some variation of it In either case the whole matter having been reopened there is a fresh decree (d) until that fresh decree is passed the old decree remains in suspense (e)

I Discovery of new and important matter or evidence—When a review is sought on the ground of the discovery of new evidence the evidence must be (1) relevant and (2) of such a character that if it had been given in the suit it might possibly have altered the judgment (f) As stated by Lord Loreburn LC in Brown v Dean (g) It [new evidence] must at least be such as is presumably to be believed and if believed would be conclusive Applications on this ground must be treated with great caution and as required by r 4 (2) (b) the Court must be satisfied that the materials placed before it in accordance with the formalities of the law do prove the existence of the facts alleged (h) It is not only the discovery of new and important evidence that entitles a party to apply for a review but the discovery of any new and important matter which was not within the knowledge of the party when the decree was made A sued B to recover a sum of money alleged to be due under a certain agreement and obtained a decree B appealed to the Privy Council Pending the appeal A brought another suit against B to recover another sum of money alleged to have become due under the same agreement and obtained a decree on the strength of the former decree Their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed the first decree B then applies for a review of the second decree and the application was allowed on the ground that in the circumstances of the case the Privy Council decision was new and important matter on which to apply for a review of the second decree (i) This decision stands on the special facts of the case. In Amrit Lal v. Madho Das (j) it was held that where a decree is based upon a decision of a Divisional Bench of the High Court and that decision is subsequently overruled by the Full Bench the reversal is no ground for a review of the decree. Nor is the production of a new ruling or authority which if brought to the notice of the Judge at the first hearing might have altered the judgment new and important matter within the meaning of this rule (l) An alteration of the law by subsequent legislation is not discovery of new matter justifying a review (l)

It is not to be supposed that the discovery of new evidence is by itself sufficient to entitle a party to a review of judgment. The provision relating to review contemplates grounds which would alter or cancel the decree. Thus if a suit is dismissed on two grounds namely (1) that no notice of suit was given and (2) that the plaintiff was illegitimate and the plaintiff applies for a review on the ground of discovery of new evidence on the question of legitimacy it is a good ground for rejecting the application that even if the Court held on the reception of new evidence that the plaintiff was legitimate it would not lead to the modification or setting aside of the original decree as the want of notice was fatal to the suit (m).

II Mistake or error apparent on the face of the record—A review may be granted whether on any ground urged at the original hearing of the suit or not whenever the Court considers that it is necessary to correct an evident error or omission (n). Thus a review was granted where an error on a point of law was apparent on the face of the judgment (o) e.g. failure to apply the law of limitation to the facts found by the Court (p). Similarly a review was granted when the provisions of the second paragraph of s 57o of the Code of 1892 [now s 99 sub s (7)] were wrongly applied (q). A review may also be granted where there is an error of procedure apparent on the face of the record e.g. where judgment is delivered without previous notice to the parties (r). But it is no ground for review that the judgment proceeds on an incorrect exposition of the law (s) or on a ruling which has subsequently been modified (t) or reversed (u). See s 152.

III For any other sufficient reason —These words mean that the reason must be one sufficient to the Court to which the application for review is made and they cannot be held to be limited to the discovery of new and important matter or evidence or the occurring of a mistake or error apparent on the record (v) Thus in Ghansham v Lal Singh (w) a reference to a Full Bench was disposed of in the absence of the respondent. The respondent proved that his absence at the hearing was due to the fact that notice of the reference was not served upon him. It was held that this

1 or where a suit was dismissed for failure to make up the deficit of Court fee and it was found that the Court fee had been embezzled by a pleader's clerk (k) or where important evidence was produced just after judgment was signed (l) Mukerjee J's anticipation of refined and subtle arguments was realized in a Pangoon case (m) where a Judge held that a reason that was not ejusdem generis might still be a reason that was at least analogous

Chhajju's case however is the law and has been followed (n). But there are some inconsistencies in the cases which follow it and these serve to illustrate the difficulty of applying the rule. Thus though Chhajju's case decided that an incorrect exposition of the law was not a sufficient reason yet in Murari Rao v. Balwant Dilshit (o) an error as to the Hindu law of succession was held to be an error patent on the face of the record and again in Brindaban v. Damodar (p) the Calcutta High Court reversed its judgment because it construed a leading case in Hindu law in a sense different to that adopted in a subsequent Privy Council decision. Another similar case is Garibani v. Suraja (q). In that case a landlord had obtained a decree for rent against tenants of a 12 anna share of a holding and advertised the whole holding for sale. The tenants of the 4 anna share sued to restrain the sale alleging fraud and collusion. The Judge dismissed the suit and then granted a review as a case on which he had relied had been subsequently overruled. In appeal Dawson Miller C.J. admitted that if review was on the ground of error patent on the face of the record no appeal lay under rule 7 but said that in view of Chhajju's case it could not be contended that review had proceeded on this ground. He held that the review was on the ground of discovery of new matter and that in this view the condition of rule 4(2)(b) was not fulfilled as the subsequent overruling decision had been published before the trial and accordingly reversed the order for review. Of other cases decided on the rule in Chhajju's case to deserve special notice Bindubashini v. Secretary of State (r) arose out of a motion by the Collector to hold an inquiry under s. 19 H of the Court Fees Act into the value of an estate. The Government pleader applied for an adjournment to call his evidence but the Judge refused and gave judgment. The Judge then granted a review as the Government pleader was under the impression that the case would not be taken up. This was reversed in revision by Pankin J. as the case was not analogous to excusable failure to bring before the Court new and important matter or evidence and as there was an element of negligence in the case for the Judge had not found that there was any justification for the Government pleader's erroneous impression. The other case Mahadeo v. Lalshams Narayan (s) decides that since Chhajju's case a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed under O 9 r 8 has no remedy by way of review.

An execution application that has been dismissed cannot be restored by way of review (t).

When a compromise has been entered into a decree the Court cannot review its order on the sole ground that the compromise has been entered into under undue influence or coercion (u). Nor is review a minor's remedy for setting aside a decree passed through the negligence of his guardian (v). Where a suit is contested by the defendant but on the date fixed for the last hearing his agent admits the plaintiff's claim in collusion with the plaintiff the case is not one of a review of judgment the remedy of the aggrieved party lies in filing a suit to set aside the decree (w) Where the Court dismissed a suit for default of appearance of the plaintiff on a date which the Court under a mistake supposed to have been fixed for the hearing of the suit and also under a mistake that notice of the hearing on that date was given to the plaintiff it was held by the Pangoon High Court that an application for review would lie (x)

Review granted on particular ground—Where a review is granted on a particular ground it is in the discretion of the Court to rehear the whole case or only the particular point on which the review has been granted (y) If the review was granted for additional evidence to be taken that evidence should be taken and any relevant evidence in rebuttal and also any other evidence which the party tendering was prevented from adducing by some cause for which he was not responsible or which it was not reasonable or necessary to call in the absence of that additional evidence Otherwise neither party will be allowed to adduce evidence which was available and which with reasonable diligence could have been produced at the trial (z)

Where an appeal dismissed summarily under O 38 r 11 is admitted on an application for review the appeal is not restricted to the single ground which was made the basis of the application for review (a)

Order—An order under O 33 r 7 refusing leave to sue as a pauper is open to review under this rule (b) And so is an order as to costs (c) and an order rejecting an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (d) But an order under s 39 (h) of the Guardians and Wards Act 1890 is not open to review (e)

Where an appeal has been preferred before application for review—After an appeal has been preferred from a decree no application can be made for a review of that decree This clearly appears from cl (a) of sub r (1) An appeal is not the less preferred within the meaning of this rule though it may be dismissed summarily under O 41 r 11 Hence a party against whom a decree has been passed is precluded after dismissal of his appeal under O 41 r 11 from applying for a review (f) If an appeal is dismissed for default and an application under O 41 r 19 has become time barred review is incompetent (g) So also if an appeal to Privy Council has been dismissed by the High Court for want of prosecution (h) But if the appeal is withdrawn it is as though no appeal had been preferred and hence it is open to the party to apply for a review (i) See notes to O 41 r 27 under the head Or for any other substantial cause

Filing of appeal pending application for review—Where an application or review has been presented by a party to the suit and an appeal is afterwards preferred from the same decree whether by the same party or by the other party to the suit the Court to which the application for review is made is not thereby deprived of jurisdiction to entertain the application (j) But that power exists so long as the appeal

r 1 or where a suit was dismissed for failure to make up the deficit of Court fee and it was found that the Court fee had been embezzled by a pleader's clerk (l) or where important evidence was produced just after judgment was signed (l) Mukerjee J's anticipation of refined and subtle arguments was realized in a Pangoon case (m) where a Judge held that a reason that was not ejusdem generis might still be a reason that was at least analogous.

Chhajju's case however is the law and has been followed (n). But there are some inconsistencies in the cases which follow it and these serve to illustrate the difficulty of applying the rule. Where an appeal dismissed summarily under O 33 r 11 is admitted on an application for review the appeal is not restricted to the single ground which was made the basis of the application for review (a)

Order—An order under O 33 r 7 refusing leave to sue as a pauper is open to review under this rule (b) And so is an order as to costs (c) and an order rejecting an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (d) But an order under s 39 (h) of the Guardians and Wards Act 1890 is not open to review (e)

Where an appeal has been preferred before application for review—After an appeal has been preferred from a decree no application can be made for a review of that decree This clearly appears from cl (a) of sub r (1) An appeal is not the less preferred within the meaning of this rule though it may be dismissed summarily under O 41 r 11 Hence a party against whom a decree has been passed is precluded after dismissal of his appeal under O 41 r 11 from applying for a review (f) If an appeal is dismissed for default and an application under O 41 r 19 has become time barred review is incompetent (g) So also if an appeal to Privy Council has been dismissed by the High Court for want of prosecution (h) But if the appeal is withdrawn it is as though no appeal had been preferred and hence it is open to the party to apply for a review (i) See notes to O 41 r 27 under the head Or for any other substantial

Filing of appeal pending application for review—Where an application or review has been presented by a party to the suit and an appeal is afterwards preferred from the same decree whether by the same party or by the other party to the suit the Court to which the application for review is made is not thereby deprived of jurisdiction to entertain the application (j) But that power exists so long as the appeal

is not heard because once the appeal is heard the decree on appeal is the final decree in the case and the application for review of judgment of the Court of first instance can no longer be proceeded with (k) And this is so even if the appeal is dismissed under O 41 r 11 (l) On the other hand, if the application for review is granted and a new decree is passed the appeal cannot be heard and it must be dismissed, for the decree appealed from is superseded by the new decree (m)

No review allowed on a question of fact after decision of second appeal—The High Court cannot in second appeal allow an application for a review of judgment on the ground of discovery of new evidence after the appeal is disposed of by that Court. The reason is that the High Court is bound in second appeal by the findings of fact of the lower appellate Court. But if the application is made before the disposal of the appeal it may be a ground for allowing the appellant to withdraw the appeal to enable him to apply to the lower appellate Court for a review of its judgment on the ground of discovery of new evidence (n)

Application to set aside order made by another Judge—One Judge of a High Court cannot set aside an order made by another Judge of that Court even though the order be wrong. The remedy lies in review on the grounds mentioned in this rule (o)

To whom application for review may be made —This is s 624 recast with proviso (c) to s 620 superadded to it. The alteration of language does not involve any alteration of law.

Rule 1 sub r (1) provide that the application for review of a decree or order should be made to the Court which passed the decree or order sought to be reviewed. That rule read with the present rule leads to the following propositions —

I Where a decree is passed by a High Court Judge the application for review of the decree may be made to that Judge or to his successor in office whatever be the ground on which the review is sought.

II (1) Where a decree is passed by a Judge other than a High Court Judge the application for review of the decree may be made to the Judge who delivered the judgment or to his successor in office provided the review is sought on the ground of—

(a) the discovery of new and important matter or evidence or

(b) some clerical or arithmetical mistake or error apparent on the face of the decree.

(2) Where a decree is passed by a Judge other than a High Court Judge and the review is sought not upon the grounds mentioned above but upon other grounds the application shall be made to the very Judge who passed the decree. It cannot be made to his successor in office (r). Thus if a review is sought of a decree passed by a Judge other than a High Court Judge on the ground of a supposed error of judgment (a) or if a review is sought of an order made by such a Judge on the ground that the order was made in the absence of the applicant and without giving him notice of the hearing (f) the application for review shall be made only to the Judge who passed the decree or made the order. Such an application however may be disposed of by the successor of the Judge who passed the decree provided that the Judge who passed the decree has ordered notice to issue under rule 4 sub rule (2) proviso (a). It is not necessary that the application should also be disposed of by the Judge who passed the decree (u).

Rule 5 provides for the hearing of applications for review.

3 [S 625] The provisions as to the form of preferring appeals shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to applications for review.

Form of applications for review

This rule relates to form and does not enlarge the right. It does not make O 43 r 1 (t) applicable to a refusal to restore an application for review (v).

4 [S 626] (1) Where it appears to the Court that there is not sufficient ground for a review, it shall reject the application.

Application where rejected

(2) Where the Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted, it shall grant the same.

Application where granted

(a) no such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party, to enable him to

to appear and be heard in support of the decree or order, a review of which is applied for and

- (b) no such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation

Alterations in the rule—The words and the Judge shall record with his order his reason for such opinion which occurred in the old section after the words it shall grant the same in sub r (2) have been omitted. Those words were construed by the Privy Council as being no more than a direction to the Judge how to act when he had decided to grant the application (w)

No such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party—The expression opposite party means the party interested to support the order sought to be vacated or modified upon the application for review. When an appeal is summarily dismissed under O 41 r 11 the order of dismissal may be set aside on an ex parte application for review without notice to the respondent. The respondent in such a case cannot be said to be the opposite party within the meaning of cl. (a) of this rule (x)

New matter or evidence—The effect of this expression is the same as if the words were new and important matter or evidence as in rule 1 above (y)

Strict proof—As to the meaning of the words strict proof in sub r (2) cl. (b) see notes to r 7 below. Sub rule (1) cl. (b) application in contravention of provisions of rule (4)

Form—As to form of notice required by sub r 2 (a) see App G form no 14.

Second application for review—See notes under the same head to r 7 below

Death of party pending review—The order granting a review only holds the judgment in suspense. The death of a party does not therefore cause the suit or appeal to abate (z)

Appeal—It is provided in general terms by O 43 r 1 cl. (w) that an appeal lies from an order under this rule granting an application for review. The High Courts of Calcutta Patna Rangoon and Lahore have held that cl. (w) is to be read with and subject to rule 7 (1) below so that an appeal lies only on the grounds mentioned in that rule (a). The Bombay High Court held in one case (b) that the appeal is against the order granting the review quite irrespective of the limitation contained in rule 1. Subsequent to this decision the Bombay High Court deleted cl. (w) from the rule so that there is no appeal now except on the grounds mentioned in rule 1 below (c). See notes to r 7 under the head Appeal

5 [S 627] Where the Judge or Judges, or any one of the Judges, who passed the decree or made the order, a review of which is applied for, continues or continue attached to the Court at the time when the application for a review is presented, and is not or are not precluded by absence or other cause for a period of six months next after the application from considering the decree or order to which the application refers, such Judge or Judges or any of them shall hear the application, and no other Judge or Judges of the Court shall hear the same

Application for review in Court consists of two or more Judges

6 [S 628] (1) Where the application for a review is heard by more than one Judge and the Court is equally divided, the application shall be rejected

Application where rejected

(2) Where there is a majority, the decision shall be according to the opinion of the majority

7 [S 629] (1) An order of the Court rejecting the application shall not be appealable, but an order granting an application may be objected to on the ground that the application was—

Order of rejection not appealable. Objections to order granting application

- (a) in contravention of the provisions of rule 2,
- (b) in contravention of the provisions of rule 4, or
- (c) after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause

Such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit

(2) Where the application has been rejected in consequence of the failure of the applicant to appear he may apply for an order to have the rejected application restored to the file, and, where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when such application was called on for hearing, the Court shall order it to be restored to the file upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit and shall appoint a day for hearing the same

(3) No order shall be made under sub rule (2) unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The words shall not be appealable have been substituted for the word final This is merely a verbal alteration
- 2 The words the Court shall order it to be restored in sub r (2) have been substituted for the words the Court may order it to be restored.
- 3 The last paragraph of the old section has been transferred to r 9

Appeal—

(i) Order rejecting application for review—No appeal lies under the Code from an order rejecting an application for review Nor does an appeal lie from such an order under cl 15 of the Letters Patent for that clause is controlled by the express provisions of this rule which says that such an order shall not be appealable and even if it is not so controlled an order rejecting an application for review is not a judgment within the meaning of that clause (d) Nor is the order open to revision under s 115 of the Code for even if it is wrong it is no more than an erroneous exercise of discretion ( ) But where there is no exercise of discretion at all as where the Court rejects the application not after considering whether there are sufficient grounds for review [r 4 sub r 1] but on the erroneous view that it has no jurisdiction to entertain the application, the order is open to revision, for it is then a case of failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court by law (f)

(ii) Order granting application for review—An appeal lies from an order granting an application for review O 43 r 1 cl. (w) But as provided by sub-r 1 it lies only in the three cases mentioned therein, for otherwise the provisions of sub-r (1) so far as they relate to appeal would be quite superfluous [see notes to r 4 above Appeal.] In cases other than those specified in the rule no appeal lies from an order granting a review either under this rule or under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (g) Thus if an appeal is preferred from an order admitting an application for review on the ground that the alleged sufficient reason for which the application was admitted did not constitute sufficient reason within the meaning of r 1 of this Order the appeal should not be entertained (h) Nor is the order appealable solely on the ground that the application for review was time barred (i) There must be an error both as to limitation and in the application of the rule as to sufficient reason If the appeal is entertained the order of the appellate Court will be set aside in revision under s 115 on the ground of material irregularity (j)

(iii) Second appeal from order passed in appeal under this rule—No second appeal lies from an order passed in appeal from an order granting an application for review. This is now sufficiently clear from the provisions of O 43 r 1 cl. (v) read with s 104 sub s (2). A applies for a review and the application is granted. B appeals from the order granting the application. Whether the appellate Court confirms or sets aside the order of the lower Court, no second appeal lies to the High Court from the order of the appellate Court (1).

(iv) Appeal from order refusing to readmit application for review dismissed for default under sub rule (2)—No appeal lies from an order refusing to readmit an application for review of judgment which has been dismissed for default under sub-rule (2) (i)

Sub rule (1) (b) In contravention of the provision of rule 4 —It is provided by r 4 above that no application for review should be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter without strict proof of the allegation as to such discovery. The words strict proof mean proof according to the formalities of law. Where an order therefore is made granting a review on proof of discovery of new matter according to the formalities of law no appeal lies from the order on the ground that the evidence adduced in proof of the allegation as to discovery of new matter was not sufficient to prove the allegation. The words strict proof do not refer to sufficiency of proof in securing the conviction of the judicial mind on the fact in dispute (m)

Grounds of objection in appeal—An order granting an application for review can only be objected to upon the three grounds specified in the rule and no other whether the objection is taken by an appeal from the order (n) or in an appeal from the final decree passed in the suit (o). The appellate Court can interfere if a review has been granted on insufficient grounds (r).

Second application for review—Though no appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for review it does not preclude a second application for review on ground different from those taken in the first application (q)

Where application for review is time barred.—The period for an application for review of judgment by a Provincial Court of Small Causes is 15 days from the date of the decree by the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction 20 days and by other Courts 90 days [Limitation Act 1908 arts 171 162 173] and the applicant is entitled under s 12 of the Limitation Act to deduct time spent in obtaining copy of the decree (r) But the Court may admit the application after the period of limitation if the applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within the prescribed period [Limitation Act 1908 s 5] Where a second application for review is made after the period of limitation the mere fact that the second application was not made because the first was pending does not constitute sufficient cause for admitting the second (s) If an application for review is admitted after the period of limitation on the ground that the applicant has shown sufficient cause the order granting the application may be appealed from as provided by cl (c) of sub r (1) and the order

may be set aside in appeal if the appellate Court holds that there was not sufficient cause for admitting the application after the period of limitation (f)

Review granted without jurisdiction—If a review is granted in a case where the Court has no jurisdiction to grant it it is not clear whether an appeal lies from the order granting the review. But the order being one made without jurisdiction, it comes within the purview of s. 115 and is therefore open to revision (u). The High Court will not interfere in revision solely on the ground that the Judge granting the review had omitted to record that the additional evidence was important (v). It has been held that no appeal lies if the review is granted in the inherent jurisdiction (w).

8 [S. 630] When an application for review is granted, a note thereof shall be made in the register and the Court may at once rehear the case or make such order in regard to the rehearing as it thinks fit.

THE SECOND SCHEDULE

ARBITRATION

Arbitration in Suits

1 [S 506] (1) Where in any suit all the parties interested agree that any matter in difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, they may, at any time before judgment is pronounced, apply to the Court for an order of reference

Parties to suit may apply for order of reference

(2) Every such application shall be in writing and shall state the matter sought to be referred

Alterations in the rule —

1 The word interested in clause (1) has been added after the word parties See notes below under the head All the parties interested must join in the application

2 The words in person or by their respective pleaders specially authorized in writing in this behalf which occurred in the old section after the word apply and before the words to the Court have been omitted.

Scope of the Schedule—The present Schedule deals with arbitration under three heads (a) —

I Where a suit has been instituted and all the parties interested agree to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit In that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court and they are governed by the provisions of paras. 1 to 16 of this Schedule The first step is to apply to the Court for an order of reference under para. 1 If all the parties interested have joined in the application an order of reference will be made under para. 3

II Where parties without having recourse to litigation agree to refer their differences to arbitration and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court In that case the parties to the agreement or any of them may apply to the Court under para. 17 to have the agreement filed in Court and to make an order of reference thereon If an order of reference is made all further proceedings will be under the supervision of the Court and they will be governed by the provisions of paras. 3 to 16 so far as they are consistent with the agreement (para. 10). See paras. 1, to 19

III Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only a right in order to give effect to the award In that case any person interested in the award may apply to the Court under para. 20 to have the award filed in Court See paras. 20 & 21.

All the parties interested must join in the application.—In order to give jurisdiction to the Court to make an order of reference under this and para. 3 it is necessary that all the parties interested must apply to the Court (b). If one of the parties is a firm all partners must join in the reference (c) but a reference by a father who is the manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his sons will bind the sons (d). If all the parties interested do not apply and an order of reference is made

(a) Gulera Kaa v Muhammad H son (1907) 9 Cal 16 91 A 51

(b) Gulera Kaa v Muhammad H son (1907) 9 Cal 16 91 A 51

(c) Gulera Kaa v Muhammad H son (1907) 9 Cal 16 91 A 51

the order is illegal and if an award is made on such reference the award also is illegal (e) and is liable to be set aside in revision (e1). Thus where in a suit for partnership accounts brought by A against B and C A and B alone applied to the Court to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration and an order of reference was made it was held on an objection raised by B to the validity of the award that C not having joined in the application the order of reference as well as the award made in pursuance thereof were illegal (f). But when the part not referred can be separated from the part referred para 12 (a) would apply. So in a suit where some of the defendants were adults and some were minors for whom no guardian ad litem was appointed and the minors were not interested in the dispute of the plaintiff with the adult defendants it was held that the Court was not justified in refusing to file the award made on a reference by all parties for the part which related to the minors and which was invalid could be separated from the other part. The proper procedure was to modify or correct the award under para 12 (a) of this Schedule (g).

The word interested is new. It has been added to give effect to a recent Allahabad decision (h). It refers to the succeeding words any matter in difference between them. A party to a suit who is not interested in a matter in difference between the other parties to the suit need not join in an application under this paragraph for an order of reference. A sues B and C praying as against B for a declaration of his title to certain property and as against C for possession of the property. A and B alone apply to the Court to refer to arbitration the question as to the ownership of the property. The Court has jurisdiction to make an order of reference though C has not joined in the application for the question of ownership is not in issue between A and C. But C not being a party to the reference the award is not binding upon him though it is binding as between A and B (i).

The High Court of Allahabad has held that a defendant who does not put in an appearance and does not contest the suit is not a party within the meaning of this paragraph. The mere fact therefore that such a defendant has not joined in the application for an order of reference will not invalidate an award (j). On the other hand the High Courts of Calcutta (k) and Madras (l) have held that the mere fact that the defendant has not put in an appearance and does not contest the suit is no ground for holding that he is not a party interested within the meaning of this paragraph also a party may be interested though no relief is claimed against him (m). A person however who is not a necessary party to a suit is not a party interested within the meaning of this para (n). See O 1 r 10 (2). The question whether a party is interested within the meaning of this paragraph must be decided on the facts of each particular case (o).

Arbitration

para 1

"Apply —This Section requires that all the parties interested should entirely agree to a reference but that they should all apply to the Court for an order of reference (p). Therefore if one of the parties interested agree to a reference but changes his mind subsequently and does not join in the application the application for an order of reference should be refused (q).

Matter in difference —This must be a matter in difference in the suit itself (r). Where an award comprises matters which are not in dispute in the suit and adjudicates upon the rights of a person who was not a party to the suit and who was interested in some of them and the findings with reference to the matters in question in the suit could not be separated from those not so in question the award is otherwise invalid within the meaning of para 15 (1) (c) and it should be set under that para so far as it deals with matters in difference in the suit (s).

Application shall be in writing —The provision requiring the application to be in writing is directory only and not imperative hence an award is not invalid merely because the application for the order of reference was not made in writing (t). In a recent case before the Judicial Committee where the agreement was in writing but it was not signed by one of the parties it was held that para 1 of this Schedule did not require that the writing should of necessity be signed (u) and it has also been held that the record made by the Court of an oral application is sufficient (v). But where a paradeshi lady was a party and the application was signed by her pleader who was not authorized by his vakalatnama to do so the award was held to be invalid (w). For form of application for an order of reference see the Appendix to this Schedule (x) No 1.

Before judgment.—A suit may be referred to arbitration after a reference is made to the High Court (x).

Court. —Section 107 of the Code provides that an appellate Court shall have the same powers as a Court of original jurisdiction. It follows therefore that an appellate Court can act under this paragraph and refer matters in dispute in the appeal to arbitration if all the parties interested agree to a reference (y). But a Court to which certain issues have been referred for trial under O 41 r 25 cannot act under this paragraph as the duty of such Court is to try the issues as directed by the appellate Court and to return to the appellate Court its findings thereon together with the evidence (z). Similarly a Court dealing with petitions under the Provincial Insolvency Act 1907 has no power to refer the proceedings to arbitrators to decide whether the petitioner should or should not be declared an insolvent (a).

Revocation of arbitrator's authority —When a matter is referred to arbitration by an agreement between the parties without the intervention of a Court of Justice the agreement to refer to arbitration cannot be revoked by any party without good cause and a mere arbitrary revocation will not be permitted by the Court (b) Where a claimant did not proceed with the reference for a period of nine months without any just cause it was held that it amounted to a good cause sufficient to entitle the other party to revoke the submission (c) Similarly if the arbitrator is indebted to one of the parties at the time of the reference or becomes so indebted after the reference and this fact is not disclosed to the other party the non disclosure is a sufficient cause for revoking the submission upon discovery of the fact (d)

But when a matter is referred to arbitration by an order of the Court the Court alone can revoke the authority of the arbitrator and only in the cases specified in paras 5, 8 and 10. The Court has no power to revoke the authority of an arbitrator in any other case. Thus where after an order of reference was made under para 3 the defendant applied to the Court for an order to revoke the authority of the arbitrator and to appoint a new arbitrator in his place on the ground that he had come to know of certain facts which showed that the arbitrator was not worthy of the confidence reposed in him it was held that the Court had no power to make the order as the case did not come either under para 5, 8 or 10. It was further held that the objection raised by the defendant could only be considered after the award was made and filed in Court and only to the extent permitted by para 10 (e). Note the words or being otherwise invalid in para 10 cl (c).

Where a party dies after application but before order of reference—The death of a party to an application made under this rule for a reference to arbitration before the order of reference is made does not operate as a revocation of the authority of the proposed arbitrator therefore if the right to sue survives it is competent to the Court to make an order of reference after substitution of the representative of the deceased party (f). All that is necessary is substantial representation without strict adherence to the rules of the Civil Procedure Code as to legal representatives and guardians ad litem (g).

Withdrawing from suit pending arbitration—See note to O 23 r 1 under the same head.

Execution proceedings—This Schedule does not apply to execution proceedings and a reference to arbitration by an execution Court is without jurisdiction (h).

Form—For form or application for an order of reference see the Appendix to this Schedule form No 1.

Sch II, shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of para 3 the award, and shall specify such time in the order

(2) Where a matter is referred to arbitration the Court shall not save in the manner and to the extent provided in the Schedule, deal with such matter in the same suit.

The word making has been substituted for the word delivery. In this word delivery was construed as meaning making. See notes below under head making of award.

Fixing of time or the making of award — The present paragraph provides that the Court should fix a reasonable time for the making of the award and specifies a time in the order of reference. Paragraph 8 enables the Court from time to time to enlarge the period for the making of the award. Paragraph 13 provides that an award made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court may be set aside by the Court. The provision contained in this paragraph requiring the Court to fix a reasonable time for the making of the award is not merely directory but imperative. Hence this provision should be strictly followed. At the same time it has been held that if no time is fixed for delivery of the award in the order of reference but the Court subsequently makes an order for enlarging the time (para. 8) and fixes in that order the time within which the award should be made the omission to fix the time in the order of reference is not fatal to the award. (i) Rankin J. has described the provisions as to reasonable time as the main pillar of the scheme of the Schedule. By the reference the Court parts with control of the suit temporarily for the time limit will bring the matter back to the Court and enable it to resume control and either to grant further time or to supersede the arbitration under para. 8. If the Court fixes no time limit it surrenders control and jurisdiction is involved because such an order professes to abrogate jurisdiction. Accordingly a reference which gave the arbitrators leave to extend for such further time as they may allow themselves was held to be invalid and the arbitrators' award superseded. (i) See para. 1, cl. (1)(c) and notes thereto.

Making of award—An award is said to be made when it is completed and signed by the arbitrators. Hence it is sufficient if the award is made that is completed and signed by the arbitrators within the period limited under this paragraph. It is not necessary to the making of the award that it should actually reach the hands of the Court within such period. The validity of the award depends upon the making of it within the period allowed and it is immaterial on what date it is actually delivered to the Court. Thus where the time fixed by the Court for the delivery of an award in a suit pending before it was 16th April 1900 and the award was completed and made on the 16th April but did not reach the hands of the Court until the 17th of April it was held that the award was within time (1).

Clause (2) —Where a matter is referred to arbitration the Court shall deal with it in the same suit except in the manner provided in this Schedule. However the Court has no power to grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit for there is no paragraph in this Schedule to the contrary.

to O 23 r 1 (l) Nor can the Court revoke the authority of the arbitrator and appoint a new arbitrator except in the cases specified in paragraph 5 (m) Nor is it open to the Court to hear the suit on the merits unless the arbitration has been superseded under paras 5 8 or 15 (n) Similarly the Court has no power to confirm an order passed by the arbitrators making payments of their fees a condition precedent to the hearing of the reference there being no paragraph in this Schedule empowering the Court to make an order in that behalf (o) On the same principle where an award is once set aside on any ground as for instance that one of the parties to the reference had died before the termination of the arbitration proceedings the Court has no power to send back the case to the arbitrators for decision (p) it must be made before the award is made. The Court has no power to enlarge the time for the making of an award after the time for making it has expired and after the award has been made (l). Sec 148 of this Code does not alter the law laid down in this respect (m). An award made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court may be set aside under paragraph 15 (1) (e). The application for extension of time need not necessarily be in writing (n).

Where by an order of reference power is given to the arbitrator to extend the time for making the award, he can only extend the time before the time originally fixed for making the award has expired (o).

Estoppel—The parties to a reference may be estopped by their conduct from impeaching the validity of an award on the ground that it was made after time (p).

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order superseding an arbitration where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court [s 104 sub s (1) cl (a)].

9 [S 515] Where an umpire has been appointed he may enter on the reference in the place of the arbitrators,—

(a) if they have allowed the appointed time to expire without making an award, or

(b) if they have delivered to the Court or to the umpire a notice in writing stating that they cannot agree

10 [S 516] Where an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them, and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties

Award need not be signed by arbitrators in each others presence—It is sufficient if all the arbitrators agree to the terms of the award and sign it. There is no provision of law requiring them to sign in the presence of each other (q). But the award must be signed by all the arbitrators before it is filed (r) but not necessarily at the same time and place (s). An award signed by one of the arbitrators while it is on the file of the Court is invalid (f).

Necessity of arbitrator's presence at meetings—When a case has been referred to arbitration the presence of all the arbitrators at all meetings and above all at the last meeting when the final act of arbitration is done is essential to the validity of the award (u)

Together with any depositions and documents — The Court has jurisdiction to compel arbitrators to give up documents that may have been filed before them as exhibits during the course of the arbitration. Also if the original records of the suit are handed to the arbitrators to enable them to proceed with the arbitration, and they fail to return them the Court can compel them to return the records (r). The arbitrators omission to file with his award the depositions and documents may lead to the inference that he has been guilty of legal misconduct (u)

Notice of the filing shall be given — It is a material irregularity within the meaning of s 115 if the Court gives judgment without issuing notice and judgment so given will be set aside in revision (x)

Delivery of award — The act of an arbitrator in delivering an award to the proper officer of the Court for the purpose of being filed in Court is not an application within the meaning of the Limitation Act. Hence there is no period of limitation within which an award should be delivered by an arbitrator to the Court (y)

Form — For form of award see the Appendix to this Schedule form no 5.

11 [S 517] Upon any reference by an order of the Court, the arbitrator or umpire may, with the leave of the Court, state the award as to the whole or any part thereof in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court and the Court shall deliver its opinion thereon, and shall order such opinion to be added to and to form part of the award

Statement of special case
by arbitrators or umpire

Special case — The special case must be on a point of law only (z)

Appeal — An appeal lies from an order on an award stated in the form of a special case [s 104 sub s (1) cl (b)] Where the arbitrators differ on certain matters referred to them but instead of referring their differences to an umpire as provided by the order of reference they submit their own opinions in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court such submission is not an award stated in the form of a special case and no appeal therefore lies from any order made upon such submission (a)

Form — For form of special case see the Appendix to this Schedule form n 4

unless such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred,

- (b) where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution,
- (c) where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it

Remission of award when the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration—The reason why an award which does not dispose of all matters referred is invalid seems to be that there is an implied condition in the submission of the parties to the arbitration that the award shall dispose of all. This implied condition may be waived by the consent of all the parties before the arbitrators (A)

Where the issues in a suit were referred to arbitration and there was no distinct and separate finding by the arbitrators on each of the issues but there was a decision on the whole matter in controversy between the parties it was held that the award could not be said to have left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration and it should not therefore be remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator (1) A separate finding on each issue is not necessary when the whole matter in issue between the parties is decided by the arbitrators (2) But where several issues in a suit are referred to arbitration and the arbitrator decides by the award only one issue the award must be remitted to his reconsideration (3) If the arbitrator fails to reconsider the award the award becomes void see paragraph 15 Even if parties come to an agreement as regards some of the matters referred to arbitration the award should contain a determination of those matters though it be in terms of the agreement otherwise the award would be open to the objection that it has left those matters undetermined (4)

Award patently illegal—This is the rule in Hodgkinson v Fernie (m) which limits the right of interference by the Court to the case where a question of law necessarily arises on the face of the award or upon some paper accompanying and forming part of the award This rule was extended in Sandaner v Asser (n) to a case where an award referred to a contract and construed it The Court of Appeal held that they were entitled to look at the contract and come to the conclusion that it was wrongly construed. Sandaner v Asser has been doubted and in Champrey Bhara d Co v Jirraj Balloo (o) the Privy Council said An error of law on the face of the award means in their Lordships' view that you can find in the award or a document actually incorporated therein, as for instance a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can say is erroneous. In this case cotton had been rejected by a buyer on a final award that it was of inferior quality under Rule 22 of the Rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association. This rule gave the buyer the option of invoicing rejected cotton back at the market rate—an option which he would of course only exercise if the market rate had risen. But here the market rate was below the contract rate and the defaulting seller claimed to recover the difference. The award allowed the claim and in the preamble of the award narrating the events which led up to the dispute and the reference to arbitration mention was made of the contract and the letter of rejection for inferiority. The Bombay High Court seized upon this recital and said that as the contract referred to the Pules and as the rejection was under Rule 52 the arbitrators must have wrongly construed the option in the rule as an obligation and that this was an error patent on the face of the award. The Privy Council however said that the rule in Hodgkinson v Fennie (p) does not mean that if in the narrative a reference is made to the contention of one party that opens the door to seeing first what that contention is and then going to the contract on which the parties depend to see if that contention is sound. They also observed that the arbitrators were entitled to put their own construction on Rule 52. In another similar case the error was said to be in the construction of a contract which was referred to in the award but their Lordships pointed out that the contract was not incorporated in the award which only made a guarded allusion to it for the purpose of earmarking the origin of the dispute (q). Where the only question in a suit was whether a Hindu was born blind and therefore not entitled to inherit and the suit was referred to arbitration and the arbitrator made an award whereby the blind man was declared to be entitled to a life interest in a certain portion of the property it was held on an objection to the award under cl (c) of this paragraph that the award was not so patently illegal that it could not be remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator (r).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this paragraph remitting an award to the reconsideration of arbitrators. Where an award is remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator and the arbitrator submits a fresh award and a decree is passed in accordance with the revised award no appeal lies from the decree on the ground that the order of remittal was wrong (r 16) and that the original award ought to have been accepted and acted upon (s). But where an award is remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator and the arbitrator refuses to reconsider the award (which consequently becomes void under paragraph 15) and the Court proceeds to try the case and passes a decree in the ordinary way [para 15 sub para (—)] the legality of the order remitting the award may be challenged on appeal from such decree (t) see sec 103.

(c) the award having been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration and proceeding with the suit or after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court, or being otherwise invalid

(2) Where an award becomes void or is set aside under clause (1), the Court shall make an order superseding the arbitration and in such case shall proceed with the suit

Points of distinction between s 521 of the Code of 1882 and this paragraph —

- 1 Award made after expiration of period allowed by Court See notes below under the same head
- 2 When the award is otherwise invalid See notes under the same head
- 3 Clause (2) is new

Misconduct—The term misconduct does not necessarily imply moral turpitude it includes neglect of the duties and responsibilities of the arbitrator and what Courts of Justice expect from them before allowing finality to their awards (1). Nor does it necessarily imply corruption (2)

Acts amounting to misconduct—The following acts have been held to amount to misconduct on the part of an arbitrator affording a ground for setting aside an award —

- 1 Irregularities in procedure which amount to no proper hearing of the matter in dispute (1) e.g. hearing and receiving evidence from one side in the absence of the other side without giving the other side affected by such evidence the opportunity of meeting and answering it (2)
- 2 Proceeding with arbitration in the absence of one of the arbitrators (3)
- 3 Refusing to hear witness produced by the parties (2)
- 4 Arbitrators improperly adding another to their number (4)
- 5 Where three out of five arbitrators were not present at the time the award was made and did not sign the award although it purported to be signed by all of them it was held that this amounted to misconduct and the award was set aside (5)
- 6 Making inquiries about the matters in reference from outside sources in the absence of the parties (6)
- 7 An unexplained delay of 5 years in making the award has been held to amount to misconduct (7)

Acquiescence in acts amounting to misconduct—It is misconduct if some of the arbitrators are not present at some of the meetings. But if this procedure is adopted with the concurrence of all the parties or acquiesced in by them it is not open to any of the parties to impeach the award on that ground (e)

Acts not amounting to misconduct—An arbitrator is not bound by technical rules of procedure. Therefore it is not a valid objection to an award that the arbitrator did not act in strict conformity with the rules of evidence (f). But he should not make private inquiries behind the backs of the parties (g) unless authorized by the wide terms of the reference (h). Again the rule of evidence which declares that letters written without prejudice should not be admitted in evidence being a rule founded upon natural justice is as binding upon arbitrators as upon Courts of Justice and an arbitrator is wrong in receiving and acting upon such a letter. But if no objection is taken by the other side to the admissibility of such letter and an award is made the award will not be set aside on the ground of misconduct (i). If it is provided in an agreement for reference that an adjustment relied upon by the plaintiff should not be taken into consideration by the arbitrator a bona fide mistake on the part of the arbitrator in admitting the adjustment in evidence does not amount to misconduct. Such a stipulation is nothing but a rule of evidence introduced pro hac vice (j). If the arbitrator is selected on account of his special knowledge of the matter in dispute it is not misconduct for him to use his special knowledge (k). But otherwise it is misconduct for an arbitrator to ignore the evidence and decide on his special knowledge (l).

It is not misconduct on the part of the arbitrator to delegate to a third party the performance of acts of a ministerial character so long as he exercises his own judgment on the matters referred (m). Misconduct cannot be presumed from the mere fact that the arbitrator is the relative of one of the parties (n). The mere fact that the arbitrator has failed to account for the delay in making the award is no ground for presuming fraud (o).

In Duta v. Municipal Committee of Lahore (p) certain matters in dispute between A and B were referred to arbitration. The agreement of reference was drawn up by A's counsel. The arbitrator feeling doubtful as to the meaning of a certain clause in the agreement wrote to A to obtain his counsel's opinion on the meaning of that clause. A obtained the opinion and sent it on to the arbitrator. B was not informed of this until after the award was made. It was held that though it would have been prudent and discreet for the arbitrator to have written to A with B's knowledge and informed B of the opinion the omission to do this did not amount to misconduct as there was no ground for impeaching the good faith of any of the parties concerned.

Evidence of arbitrator—Where a charge of dishonesty or partiality is made against an arbitrator any relevant evidence he can give is fully admissible. It is however necessary to take care that evidence admitted as relevant on such charges is not used for a different purpose namely to criticize the decision of the arbitrator on matters within his jurisdiction and in which his decision is final (q).

Arbitration

para 15

Appeal from decree based on an award on ground of misconduct—No appeal lies from a decree passed in accordance with an award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrator (r). The only remedy available to the party aggrieved by the award is to apply to have it set aside under this paragraph. See notes to paragraph 16 below under the head Invalid award

Fraudulent concealment of any matter which ought to have been disclosed—Where the arbitrator was the retained pleader of the plaintiff and the fact was not disclosed by the plaintiff to the defendant before the arbitrator was appointed the award was set aside on the ground that that fact was one which ought to have been disclosed. Every disclosure which might in the least affect the merits of those who are proposing to submit their dispute to the arbitrament of any particular individual as regards his selection and fitness for the post ought to be made so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made (s).

Award made subsequent to order superseding arbitration—If an order is made superseding the arbitration under paragraph 5 or 8 or under cl. (d) of this paragraph or if the period fixed for making the award has expired the arbitrator has no longer seignior of the reference and they are functus officio and cease to have any more power to make an award than the man in the street (t). Similarly an arbitrator functus officio after the award is made and he cannot thereafter add to or alter the award (u).

Award made after expiration of period allowed by Court—Clause (c) of s. 521 stopped at the words the suit which occurs in cl. (1) sub-cl. (c) of this para. It was followed by another clause which ran thus: And no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court. The latter clause has now been amended and in stead thereof we have the words: or after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court added into sub-cl. (c). The effect of this alteration is that the only remedy now open to the party impeaching an award on the ground that it was made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court is to apply under this paragraph to set aside the award. If no application is made to set aside the award under this paragraph or if the application is made but refused the award becomes final and no appeal will lie from a decree based upon the award (v). [Under the Code of 1887 it was held that an appeal lay from a decree based upon such an award (w).] If the application to set aside the award is granted and an order is made under sub-para. (2) superseding the arbitration the order is appealable under s. 104 sub. (1) cl. (a). See notes to r. 16 below. No appeal lies from a decree based on an award etc. and notes to paragraph 3 above. Making of award.

Another consequence of the alteration is that whereas under s. 521 of the old Code an award out of time was a nullity (x) it is not so under the present rule. Under the present rule it is merely voidable and if not sought to be set aside within the period of limitation [Limitation Act 1908 art. 108] it is binding upon the parties.

When the award is otherwise invalid—The words or being otherwise invalid at the end of sub-cl. (c) are new. Under the Code of 1882 it was held that when an award was not a valid and legal award an appeal would lie from the decree based upon such award even though the decree might be in accordance with the award. The leading case on the subject was Kali Prasanno Ghose v. Pajani Kant (y) decided by the High Court of Calcutta in the year 1898. The object of adding the words or being otherwise invalid into sub cl (c) is to supersede the Calcutta and other decisions which allowed an appeal from a decree based upon an invalid award and to give effect to the principle of finality in cases of arbitration enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gulamkhan v. Muhammad Hassan ( ) and followed in recent cases (a). The result is that the only remedy now open to a party seeking to impeach an award as being invalid is to apply under this paragraph to have it set aside. If he fails to do so or if an application is made but refused the award becomes final and no appeal will lie from a decree based upon the award. See notes to paragraph 16 under the head Invalid award. It is worth while noting that the Special Committee which introduced these alterations intended to allow an appeal from an order under this paragraph setting aside or refusing to set aside an award (b) but no such provision is contained in s 101. The words or being otherwise invalid do not include the question whether there was or was not a valid reference to arbitration. An application in revision will therefore lie on the ground of the initial invalidity of the reference (c).

An award is not illegal merely because it is based on evidence given by one of the parties on a special oath administered under the Indian Oaths Act with the consent of the other party (d)

An award is invalid if the arbitrators go beyond the scope of the suit and decide matters which are not in suit and which concern persons who are not parties to the suit. Panel in J said such an award cannot be treated partly as an award on a reference by the Court and partly as an award by private agreement for there is no provision for such simultaneous arbitration and the jurisdiction for the different types of arbitration must not be confused (e). The Privy Council reserved their opinion as to whether there may not be an exception to this comprehensive statement as to simultaneous arbitration but held that such an award was not in accordance with the terms of reference and therefore otherwise invalid under para 15 (f). In a subsequent case the parties to a suit applied for a reference as to matters in dispute in the suit and other matters as well. The Court referred to arbitration the matters in dispute in the suit only. The parties then made a reference without the intervention of the Court of these other matters to the same arbitrators who made two awards. The Court held that as the arbitrators had kept the two matters distinct the award on the reference was valid (g).

Appeal from order under this paragraph—Except in the case of an award made by a local authority or a body of persons appointed by it, no appeal lies from an order under this paragraph setting aside or varying an award. If the objecting party does not apply for such an order, the Court has no option but to pronounce judgment in favor of the award, and the decree made thereon cannot be set aside unless it is shown to be an ex parte decree.

Chartered High Court it amounts to a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letter Patent and is appealable under that clause See notes to s 104 under the head Letters Patent appeal See also notes to paragraph 21 below under the head Appeal

It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay and by the Chief Court of the Punjab that though no appeal lies from an order setting aside an award the legality of the order may be challenged on appeal from the decree that may be ultimately passed in the suit (L) [s s 10.] A different view has been taken by the High Court of Allahabad (l)

Revision—An order under this paragraph setting aside or refusing to set aside an award is not subject to revision (m) But an order superseding arbitration may be attacked under s 105 in appeal from the decree in the suit (n)

referred to arbitration for re-consideration in manner aforesaid, and no application has been made to set aside the award, or the Court has refused such application, the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award

(2) Upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with the award

After the time for making such application has expired—That is after 10 days from the date on which the award is filed in Court and notice of the filing has been given to the parties see Limitation Act 1908 sch 1 art 158 as amended by Act IV of 1919 Before the amendment the period of 10 days commenced from the date on which the award was submitted to the Court See the preamble to Act 18 of 1919 The amendment seems to have been suggested by the judgments of the learned judges in the undermentioned Calcutta case (o)

No appeal lies from a decree based on an award except in so far as such decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award—In reference to arbitration the general rule is that as the parties choose their own arbitrator to be the judge in the dispute between them they cannot object to his decision either upon the law or upon the facts It is now well established that where a matter is referred to an arbitrator he is the sole and final judge of all questions not only of fact but of law (p)

Thus where an award was impeached on the ground that it was against law their Lordship of the Privy Council said: "They [arbitrators] may have erred in law but arbitrators may be judges of law as well as judges of fact and an error in law certainly does not vitiate an award (q). And this principle has been carried so far that if parties submit to an arbitrator the decision of a bare point of law and he gives an erroneous decision his award is binding notwithstanding (r). In all the cases the Court would say to the party seeking to set aside the award: 'You have constituted your own tribunal you are bound by its decision (s). The present paragraph gives effect to the principle of finality of awards by declaring that no appeal shall lie from a decree based on an award except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award (t). The only cases in which the Code allows an appeal from a decree based on an award are—

- (1) where the decree is in excess of the award as where the decree gives interest which the arbitrators have not awarded (u) or
- (2) where the decree is not in accordance with the award

In this respect there is no difference between a decree based upon a private award (para. 21) and a decree based upon an award made through the intervention of the Court (1).

Is a decree based on an award which has been modified by the Court under paragraph 12 a decree in accordance with the award? It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it is not and hence an appeal lies from the decree. Thus where an award directed the defendant to make certain payments to the plaintiff by instalments and the award was modified by the Court under paragraph 12 by omitting the direction as to payment by instalments and a decree was passed on the award as so modified it was held that an appeal would lie from the decree (iv). The soundness of this decision is open to question. It is submitted that a decree is in accordance with an award within the meaning of this paragraph if it is in accordance with the award as modified under paragraph 12, though it may not be in accordance with the original award. Paragraph 16 says "The Court shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award." It is clear that when an award is modified under paragraph 12, the only award in accordance with which judgment can be pronounced is the modified award. Moreover the decision runs counter to the principle of finality which finds expression in the Code.

Where an application made under para 13 cl (c) to set aside an award on the ground that it was made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court has been refused and a decree is subsequently passed in accordance with the award no appeal lies from the decree if it is in accordance with the award. Nor does any appeal lie from the decree under the Letters Patent (r). See notes to paragraph 13 above. Award made after expiration of period allowed by Court and notes given was that that section presupposed a valid and legal award and not an award upon which no decree could be passed (y) A different view however was taken by the Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghulam Akhan v Muhammad Hussain ( ) decided in the year 1902 After that expression of opinion two of our High Courts held that an appeal lay under a 522 from a decree passed on an award on the ground that the award was invalid (a) Under the present Code it is quite clear that no appeal lies from a decree where such decree is passed in accordance with the award though the award may be invalid. But the party aggrieved by the award may apply under para. 13 cl. (1), sub-cl (c) to have the award set aside. If he does not avail himself of that remedy the award becomes final and no appeal lies from the decree based upon the award. This change has been introduced by the insertion of the words "or the award be otherwise invalid" in para 1 cl. (1) sub-cl (c). The object is to give finality to awards as stated in the notes to paragraph 15 under the head "Where the award is otherwise invalid." The effect of this alteration is that no appeal lies under this Code when a decree has been passed under the present paragraph upon an award except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award (b) The result is that all those cases in which it was held under the Code of 1852 that a decree though it be in accordance with the award may be challenged by way of appeal on the ground that there was no valid and legal award are no longer law. In a Lahore case sons of one of the parties interested in the property were joined as parties after the award was filed, and made detailed objections to the award. When their objections were disallowed and a decree passed in terms of the award, the Court held that they had by their conduct submitted to the arbitration proceedings and had no right of appeal although they had not actually been parties to the reference (c)

According to the old section an appeal would lie from a decree upon such an award (d). Such an application should be made within 10 days from the date on which the award is submitted to the Court (e) under paragraph 1.

(b) An award made after the expiration of the period fixed by the Court under paragraph 3 or enlarged by the Court under paragraph 8 is invalid. According to the old section an appeal would lie from a decree based on such award (e). No appeal lies

(c) An award must be signed before it is filed and it must be signed by all the arbitrators. An award signed by some only of the arbitrators is illegal. Similarly, an award signed by an arbitrator after the same has been filed in Court is illegal. According to the old section an appeal would lie from a decree based on such award. (f) No appeal lies under this paragraph but the party aggrieved by the award may apply under paragraph 10 to have it set aside. (n)

(d) The matters in difference in a suit between A and B are referred to the arbitration of C. C is the retained pleader of A but this fact is not disclosed to B [see para 16]. C makes an award. The award is illegal. According to the old section an appeal would lie from the decree (A). No appeal lies under the present paragraph but B can apply to have the award set aside under paragraph 15.

An appeal lies from a decree based upon a judgment pronounced in contravention of the provisions of this paragraph though the decree may be in accordance with the award—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that if a decree is passed on an award before the time for making the application to set aside the award has expired an appeal will lie from the decree though the decree may be in accordance with the award (i) But in such cases the Bombay and Lahore High Courts interfere by way of revision (j) The Allahabad High Court has held that where an application to set aside an award has been refused by the Court without considering it and a decree is passed on the award an appeal will lie from the decree though the decree may be in accordance with the award. The reason given is that the word refused in this paragraph means refused after judicial consideration (k)

Second appeal—A second appeal will lie to the High Court where the decree of the Court of first instance is in accordance with the award and such decree is set aside by the first appellate Court. The reason is that no appeal lies from a decree passed in accordance with an award and the first appellate Court acts without jurisdiction in entertaining the appeal and setting aside the decree passed in accordance with the award (i). In a similar case the High Court of Calcutta held that no second appeal lies but that the High Court may revoke the order under s. 115 (m).

A second appeal will arise where the Court of first instance sets aside the award and passes a decree on the merits and the first appellate Court sets aside the decree and passes a decree in accordance with the award. The mere fact that the decree of the first appellate Court is in accordance with the award is no ground for refusing the appeal (n).

Revision.—We have seen that no appeal lies from a decree passed in accordance with an award. Section II, provides that where no appeal lies from a decision, an application may be made to the High Court for a revision of the decision. No such application, however should be admitted in the case of an award. In the case of an award revision would be more objectionable than an appeal. If an application for revision were admissible in a case where the decree is in accordance with the award, the finality of any award would be open to question (o). Thus where an application was made for revision on the ground that there was no valid order of reference and that the award was therefore a nullity and that no decree ought to have been passed on such an award the High Court of Allahabad refused to entertain the application (p). But in a later case where the lower Court dealing with the objections set aside the award because of a supposed defect in the reference the Allahabad High Court interfered in revision on the ground that the Court had acted without jurisdiction (q). The latter opinion seems to be that revision is admissible for the purpose not of interfering with the arbitrator but with the exercise of jurisdiction by the Courts below in the procedure and order of the judgment along with the objections (r). See notes above. An appeal lies from a decree based upon a judgment etc.

Enforcement—When a decree is passed in terms of the award the only mode of enforcing the award is by execution of the decree no separate suit will lie to enforce the award (s).

Where the Court acts as arbitrator—Where a reference is made to the presiding Judge the parties must be deemed to have agreed to accept his decision as final. Hence no appeal lies from the decision of the judge in such a case (t). Nor is the decision subject to the provisions of the present Schedule so as to entitle either party to object to the decision as if it was an award under this schedule. A decree passed in accordance with such a decision must be regarded as a consent decree and it comes within the purview of O 23 r 3. The same principle applies even if the reference is made to the presiding Judge and another person jointly (u). A Judge to whom a reference is made has no power to alter his decision once it is given. In this respect his position is that of an arbitrator who has no power to alter an award once it is made by him (v). See notes to s 21 above.

Distinction between valuer and arbitrator—A sue B for a declaration that he is entitled to one half share of certain property. An order is made by consent that A should pay B a quarter of the value of the property to be valued by a certain referee nominated by the parties. The order is not one passed under para 2 and 3 and the decision of the referee is not an award on which a judgment could be pronounced under the present paragraph (w). But the terms of the agreement between the parties may be such that the valuer may be invested with the power of an arbitrator in which case the valuation made by him may operate as an award. followed the enumeration of several questions] such questions or disputes shall be referred to the engineer whose decision shall be conclusive and binding on both parties. It was assumed that the above clause was an agreement to refer to arbitration and the only question argued was whether in view of a letter written by the engineer to the contractor after intimation to the parties to proceed with the arbitration the engineer had rendered himself incapable of acting as an arbitrator. It was contended on behalf of the contractor that the true inference from the letter was that the engineer had so completely made up his mind against him that he would not be patiently listened to and receive an honest decision but this contention was overruled.

Order of reference on agreements to refer

17 [S 523] (1) Where any persons agree in writing that any difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, the parties to the agreement or any of them, may apply to any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates that the agreement be filed in Court

Application to file in Court agreement to refer to arbitration

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant, if the application has been presented by all the parties or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) On such application being made the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all the parties to the agreement other than the applicants requiring such parties to show cause, within the time specified in the notice why the agreement should not be filed.

(4) Where no sufficient cause is shown, the Court shall order the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement or, if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, the Court may appoint an arbitrator.

Alteration in the paragraph—In cl 4 the words and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement or if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree the Court may appoint an arbitrator are substituted for the words and shall make an order of reference thereon and may also nominate the arbitrator when he is not named therein and the parties cannot agree as to the nomination.

Arbitration

para 17

Does not apply—The procedure prescribed by this paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies. See notes to s 89

Scope of the paragraph—Paras 1 to 16 deal with cases in which the parties to a suit agree to refer the matters in difference between them in the suit to arbitration and apply to the Court for an order of reference. The application in such a case may be made by all the parties to the suit interested in the matters in difference proposed to be referred to arbitration. Thus and the subsequent paragraph refer to cases in which persons themselves agree independently of the Court to refer the matters in difference between them to arbitration (y). In such a case any party to the agreement may apply to the Court to have the agreement filed and to have an order of reference made thereon. Where such an order is made the provisions of paras 2 to 16 apply to the proceedings in so far as they are consistent with the agreement so filed ( ) [para 19]. When a submission is filed in Court under this paragraph the submission is said to be made a rule of the Court.

Agreement to refer to arbitration matters in difference in a pending suit—An agreement to refer to arbitration matters in difference between the parties to a pending suit without the order of the Court under paras 1 to 3 above is illegal and cannot be filed under this paragraph (a). Whether an award made on such a reference is an adjustment within the meaning of O 23 r 3 has been discussed in the notes on that rule under the heading submission and award.

Though an agreement to refer matters in dispute in a pending suit without an order of the Court is invalid there is nothing to prevent parties compromising their suit on the terms of an award made on such an agreement. Thus in a Patna case (b) parties came to an agreement to arbitrate in a pending suit and applied the same day to the Court to withdraw the suit. The suit was allowed to be withdrawn and the award made and filed under paras 20 and 21. This was quite correct for the agreement was virtually conditional on the Court surrendering its jurisdiction by allowing the suit to be withdrawn. An agreement to refer to arbitration the partition of a testator's estate does not encroach upon the jurisdiction of the Court in which proceedings for the probate of the will are pending and is therefore valid (c).

The agreement must be in writing—This paragraph does not apply unless the agreement to refer is in writing (d).

Agreement to refer future differences to arbitration—Where a charter party contains a clause that any disagreement that may arise [i.e. arise in future] between the contracting parties as to the proper interpretation of the charter should be referred to arbitration the agreement though it refers to future differences can be filed under this paragraph (e). Agreements to refer future differences are not outside the scope of this section.

Numbered and registered as a suit.—It has been held that in spite of those words a proceeding under this para is not a suit for a suit is commenced by filing a plaint (f). The High Court of Calcutta has held that a proceeding under para 17 is a suit (g). It is submitted however that these words make it a statutory suit otherwise the words would have been numbered and registered as if it were a suit.

Sufficient cause —Where an agreement is to refer to several specified arbitrators and one of the arbitrators dies before the application is made under this paragraph the Court should not make an order of reference under this paragraph (k). But it is otherwise if the agreement contains an express provision that in case of death of any arbitrator another arbitrator may be appointed in his place (i). During the pendency of a private arbitration one of the parties died and the arbitrator thinking he had no power to join the legal representative refused to go on. On an application to file the agreement it was held that the Court had no power to order the arbitrator to proceed (j). In another similar case (k) the Court appointed a new arbitrator under para 5 which is made applicable by para 19 if its exercise is not inconsistent with the agreement of reference.

Arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement —Thus where an agreement provides for a reference to a European merchant the Court has no power to appoint an Indian merchant (l). If the agreement is for reference to three arbitrators the Court cannot add a clause that in case of disagreement the opinion of the majority shall prevail (m).

Where the agreement to refer has been duly revoked —Where an agreement to refer has been revoked for good cause by one of the parties thereto the Court is not competent to order it to be filed under this paragraph (n). See notes to para 1 under the head Evocation of arbitrator's authority.

Umpire —If an agreement filed under this paragraph does not contain any provision for the appointment of an umpire in the event of the arbitrators being unable to agree the Court has no power under this paragraph to appoint an umpire (o).

Appeal —An order under this paragraph filing or refusing to file an agreement to refer to arbitration is now appealable as an order [s 104 sub s (1) cl (d)]. Under the Code of 1890 it was appealable as a decree (p).

Revision —The mere fact that the application is not numbered and registered as a suit as required by cl (2) of this paragraph is no ground for interfering in revision such an irregularity is not a material irregularity within the meaning of s 110 (q).

for an order of discovery and the order asked for was made it was held that he had taken a step in the proceedings and therefore was not entitled to a stay (w)

Institutes any suit—These words show that the present rule refers only to suits instituted after the agreement to refer to arbitration has been made. A sues B in respect of certain matters. The parties then agree to refer the matters to arbitration. Subsequently A declines to proceed with the arbitration and writes to B that he will proceed with the suit. B applies for an order staying the suit. The Court has no power under this paragraph to stay the suit for the suit was instituted prior to the agreement (x).

No sufficient cause —The burden lies on the plaintiff to show that some sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be referred to arbitration and not on the defendant to show that no such reason exists (9)

May make an order staying the suit —The Court has a discretion under this paragraph as to staying a suit instituted by one party to a submission against the other party. At the same time it must be remembered that it is the prima facie duty of the Court to act upon the agreement between the parties (1). If parties choose to determine for themselves that they will have a domestic forum instead of resorting to the ordinary Court then since that Act of Parliament [that is the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 s. 11 which corresponds to the present paragraph] was passed a prima facie duty is cast upon the Courts to act upon such an agreement (2). If however the arbitration proves abortive the Court may remove the stay and proceed with the trial of the suit (3).

Denial of agreement—Where one of the parties denies the agreement to refer set up by the other party it is within the province of the Court to decide whether there is or is not an agreement (c).

Validity of agreement to refer.—To bring a case within this paragraph there must be a subsisting agreement to refer capable of being carried into effect. A suit therefore cannot be stayed under this paragraph if the submission has been revoked for good cause (1). Nor can it be stayed if the original contract containing the arbitration clause is followed by another agreement materially altering the original contract for in that case the arbitration clause ceases by virtue of the alteration to have any effect. But a mere extension of time for the performance of that which a party under the original contract is bound to perform does not amount to a material alteration and the arbitration clause does not cease to operate in such a case (e). See Lall Ch. and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, notes to s. 28.

Stay refused—Where an arbitration clause does not cover all the matters in respect of which the suit is brought the Court will not as a rule split the suit into two parts, one to be tried by the arbitrator and the other to be tried in Court; the Court will in such a case try the whole suit (f). Where fraud is charged the Court will in

Does not apply—This paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies See notes to s 89

So far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under paragraph 17 —This paragraph provides that where an order of reference is made under paragraph 17 the provisions of paras 3 to 16 shall apply to all proceedings under the order only so far as they are consistent with the agreement filed under paragraph 17 The order under paragraph 8 the Court has the power to extend the period for the making of the award. But if the agreement filed under paragraph 17 provides that the arbitrators shall make their award within a fixed period and that they shall have no power to enlarge the time for making the award, the stipulation in the agreement will prevail to the exclusion of the provision in paragraph 8 But the words so far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under paragraph 17 would not preclude the Court from setting aside an award for misconduct of the arbitrators though there may be a clause in the agreement that the award should be accepted as final (i) Nor do they preclude the Court from appointing a new arbitrator under paragraph 5 in place of one who refuses to act provided there is no clause in the submission expressly excluding the power of the Court to make such an appointment (j) If the new arbitrator refuses to act the Court may make an order superseding arbitration and such order is not appealable (k).

(3) The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration, other than the applicant requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the award should not be filed

Old section—This paragraph corresponds to s 523 of the Code of 1887 except that in cl (1) the word any Court having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the award have been substituted for the words Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates See notes below Court to which application should be made under this paragraph

Pending suit—See notes to para 17 above under the head Agreement to refer to arbitration matters in a pending suit See also notes to O 23 r 3 above
Adjustment submission and award

Scope of this and subsequent paragraph—The present paragraph and paragraph 21 refer to cases where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award (l)

This paragraph is no bar to a regular suit to enforce an award—Under the corresponding section 523 of the Code of 1887 it was held that a party interested in an award may at his option avail himself of the summary remedy provided by that section to enforce the award or he may bring a regular suit to enforce the award (m) There is nothing in the present Code to preclude such a suit Rather such a suit is saved by s 89 as appears from the words save in so far as is otherwise provided by any other law for the time being in force (n) See notes to para 21 below Res judicata

A valid award constitutes a bar to a suit on the original demand—An award duly issued in accordance with the submission of the parties is equivalent to final judgment Hence if an award is made for a partition of joint property no party to the reference can sue for partition The award is an answer to the suit though no decree may have been passed on the award (o)

Court to which application should be made under this paragraph—It is the subject matter of the award and not the subject matter of the reference that determines the jurisdiction of the Court under the present paragraph Under the old section the application to file the award had to be made to the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates and these words were held by the High Court of Calcutta to mean the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the reference (p) The words subject matter of the award have been substituted in this paragraph for the words matter to which the award relates to make it clear that an application under this paragraph may be made to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the award. So when the subject matter of an award was the management and control of three temples in the district of Berar and the question of the application of the revenue was before members of the founder's family not resident in Berar the Privy Council held that the District Judge of Berar has no jurisdiction to entertain an application to file it (1).

Limitation—The application under this paragraph should be made within 6 months from the date of the award. Limitation Act 1908 sch I art 1 § (1). The date of the award means not the date the award bears but the date on which it was given to the parties (2) i.e. the date of publication (3). The application is not a suit and therefore the applicant cannot claim the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act (4). See notes to para 17 above. Numbered and registered as a suit.

Where an award is delivered in parts—If the agreement to refer provides that the matter in dispute may be taken up and dealt with seriatim and that the award may be delivered bit by bit each portion decided may be dealt with as a distinct award under this paragraph (5).

Lost award—When an award has been lost the procedure of this rule cannot be resorted to and the parties must be referred to a regular suit (6).

Where any matter has been referred to arbitration—Does any matter refer only to a matter in respect of which a suit can be entertained by a Court under a D of the Code?—This paragraph provides that when any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court and an award has been made thereon any person interested in the award may apply that the award be filed in Court. Paragraph 21 provides for the passing of a decree on the award. But what if the award referred to arbitration is one as to which a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit under a D of the Code e.g. disputes about manu and an award is made thereon. Has the Court jurisdiction to file such an award and pass a decree thereon under paragraph 21? It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that it has and that it is not against the policy of the law to give effect to such awards (7). The result is that rights which are not at all civil rights may be the subject matter of an arbitration award and of the decree of a Civil Court. It would be interesting to know how the decree if disobeyed would be enforced. However this may be it is clear that if a matter is such that on grounds of public policy it can be disposed of only by a Court it cannot be the subject of a reference and if such a matter is referred and an award is made the Courts should refuse to pass a decree thereon. Thus the right to succeed to the trusteehip of a public charitable trust is not a right which can be settled by arbitration. A Court therefore has no jurisdiction to entertain an application to file an award in such a matter under this paragraph (8).

Numbered and registered as a suit—See notes to para 17 under the same head. The Bombay High Court has held that the application when numbered and registered as a suit becomes a suit for the purpose of O 34 and the Court has jurisdiction to direct attachment before judgment (9).

matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon, and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award

(2) Upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award

Points of distinction between s 256 of the Code of 1882 and this paragraph —

- 1 The words "where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon" have been added into cl (1) to negative the view held by the High Court of Bombay under the old section that the Court had no power to determine questions relating to the factum and validity of the agreement to refer and of the award and to give effect to the view held by the three High Courts. See notes below. Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration &c

The word "proved" has been substituted for the word "shown". In fact it was held under the old section that the word "shown" meant "proved". See notes below under the head "Proved".

Does not apply — This paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies. See notes to s 1.

When the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon — The words are new. In the absence of the words in the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Court of Bombay that if an application was made under that section to file an award and the other party raised objection to the factum or validity of the submission and award the Court has no jurisdiction to inquire whether the parties had or had not referred the matters in dispute to arbitration and should therefore reject the application and refer the applicant to a rescissory suit to enforce the award. (b) On the other hand by the High Court of Allahabad (c) Calcutta (d) and Madras (e) held that the Court had the power under that section to determine all questions relating to the existence and validity of the alleged agreement to refer and of the award and that the applicant must not be referred to a separate suit. The present paragraph supercedes the Bombay decision and gives effect to the decisions of the three High Courts.

Proved — It is not sufficient to allege grounds of objections under paras. 14 and 15. It is necessary that the ground of objection should be proved. See notes above under the head "Interference" etc.

Arbitration

para 21

Grounds of objection under paras 14 and 15.—Where a matter has been referred to arbitration under an order of the Court the Court has power in the case mentioned in para. 14 to remit the award to the reconsideration of the arbitrator. But if an award determines any matter not referred to arbitration the Court may remit the award under para. 14 and if such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred the Court may amend the award by striking out that portion of the award which is in excess of the reference and enforce the award as to the rest of it. In the case however of an arbitration without the intervention of the Court [paras 20-21] the High Courts have held in a series of cases that if the award determines matters outside the scope of the reference the Court must refuse to file the award even when the matter not referred can be separated from that which was referred the reason given being that the Court had under this para. only two courses open to it, namely to file the award or refuse to file it and that it had no power to remit or amend the award (f). This however is incorrect for para. 21 refers to para. 14 where the principle of separation is recognised. The point is concluded by the decision of the Privy Council (g) that the part of the award which is good should be filed and the remainder that is bad rejected.

An arithmetical error according to the Allahabad High Court does not render the award invalid (h). But the Lahore High Court has held that the Court has no power to correct an arithmetical mistake even with the consent of the parties affected the reason given being that a Court acting under this paragraph must either file the award as it is or refuse to file it (i). But this is inconsistent with the Privy Council ruling referred to above.

Award made after long delay.—Where the agreement to refer was made in 1900 and the award was not made until 1910 and the Court came to the conclusion that it would probably not have been made at all but for one of the parties having brought a criminal complaint against one of the arbitrators the Court refused the application to file the award. The Court presumed from the circumstances of the case that the reference had been abandoned (j).

Award made after revocation of submission.—An award made after the agreement to refer has been revoked by one of the parties thereto for good cause cannot be filed under this paragraph (k).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this paragraph filing or refusing to file an award (s 104 sub s (1) cl (f)) even though no express order is made (l). But no appeal lies from the order passed on appeal (m) sro s 101 (n) (n). But s. 104 refers to appeals within British India and does not take away the right of appeal to Privy Council given by section 103 (o). Again though an appeal lies from an order made under the paragraph no appeal lies from a decree passed on an award except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award (p) [see sub para (2)]. But is the right of appeal lost if the decree on the award is passed before the appeal is preferred from the order? It has been held that it is not and it has been further held that if the appellate Court sets aside the order it is competent also to declare that the decree based on the order is vacated (q). See notes to para 15 above. Award made after expiration of period allowed by the Court.

The making of a decree is no bar to an application to restore a petition of objection which has been dismissed for default of appearance (r). 4 applies to file an award under para 20. B objects to the filing of the award on certain grounds. On the date fixed for the hearing of the objections B does not appear. Thereupon his objections are disallowed and an ex parte decree is passed against B in accordance with the award. B thereupon applies under O 9 r 13 to set aside the ex parte decree and to hear his objections to the award. The application is rejected. B then appeals from the order rejecting the application. Is the order appealable? Yes it is appealable under O 43 r 1 (d) by which it is provided that an appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for an order to set aside an ex parte decree in a case open to appeal. The case is one open to appeal for the question between the parties was whether or not the award should be filed as a decree of the Court and any order made upon it would be appealable under s 104 sub s (1) cl (f) (s).

Res judicata—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the refusal of a Court to file a private award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrator does not operate as res judicata in respect of a suit subsequently brought to enforce the award the reason given being that the doctrine of res judicata presupposes a former suit and a decree in that suit and that the order of refusal is not a decree but merely an order (t). This decision has been followed by the Bombay High Court (u). The Calcutta High Court has held that the bar of res judicata would only apply to grounds of objection referred to in paras. 14 and 15 heard and finally decided (v).

Withdrawal of suit—The fact that an application has been made under para 20 does not preclude the applicant from withdrawing the application under O 23 r 1 at any time prior to the pronouncement of judgment and preparation of the decree.

EXECUTION OF DECREEES BY COLLECTORS

1 [S 321] Where the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector under section 68, he may—

Powers of Collector

- (a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immovable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment debtor to raise the amount of the decree or
- (b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term on payment of a premium or by mortgaging the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold, or
- (c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary

Clause (a).—See O 21 r 83

Payment by instalments—A Collector to whom a decree for sale of mortgaged property has been transferred for execution under s 68 is limited to one of the three courses specified in this paragraph and may not depart from them much less may he do what the Court itself could not do in such a case—allow payment of the debt to be made by instalments (a) Nor has the Collector jurisdiction when mortgaged property is sold under O 31 r 12 free of a prior mortgage encumbrance to settle accounts as to what is due on each mortgage (b) When the Collector receives sale proceeds they are assets held by the Court and so an application for ratable distribution must be made before receipt of sale proceeds by the Collector (c)

2 [S 323] Where the execution of a decree, not being a decree ordering the sale of immovable property in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same but being a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immovable property, has been so transferred the Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to believe that all the liabilities of the judgment debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immovable property, may proceed as hereinafter provided

DESPATCH FROM SECRETARY OF STATE

SIR CHARLES WOODS DESPATCH ACCOMPANYING FIRST
LETTERS PATENT OR CHARTER

Judicial No 44

INDIA OFFICE
London 14th May 1862

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

My Lord

I HEREBY transmit to you the Letters Patent or Charter (a) under the Royal Sign Manual for the High Court of Judicature to be established in Bengal in accordance with the provisions of the Act 24 and 25 Victoria Chapter 104 for establishing High Court of Judicature in India and request that you will take immediate measure for instituting the Court the first Judges of which including those appointed under the 3rd section of the Act are designated in the second clause of the Charter Those appointed by the Crown will be severally informed by me of their appointments to the Court

2 This Charter will accomplish the great object which has so long been contemplated of substituting for the Supreme and Sudder Courts abolished by the Act of High Court of Judicature possessing the combined powers and authorities of the abolished Courts and exercising jurisdiction both over the Provinces under the Sudder Court and over the Presidency Town which forms the local jurisdiction of the Supreme Court

3 Before I review the provisions in detail it is necessary that I should direct your attention to the general scope and main provisions of the Act in question

4 It abolishes in the first place (as soon as the Charter shall issue) the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Dewany Adawlut It vests in the High Court (by the last provision of section 9) the powers and authorities of those Courts respectively except so far as the Crown may by such Charter otherwise direct And by (the first part of the same section) it invests the High Court with such Civil Criminal Admiralty Vice Admiralty Testamentary Intestate and Matrimonial Jurisdiction and all such powers and authority in relation to the administration of justice in the Presidency as the same Charter may confer With respect therefore to the fusion of the Supreme and Sudder Courts it appears obvious that the Act itself speaks and that to assume and effect the same purpose by affirmative declaration in the Charter would be superfluous It has been consequently deemed unnecessary that the Charter should exhibit on the face of it an explicit statement of the powers and jurisdiction to be possessed by the new Court in consequence of the fusion as would have been the proper course if these powers and jurisdiction had been entirely new Recourse has been had in some places in lieu of such explicit statement to reference to statutory provisions and in others to the Charter of the Supreme Court when the object of clearness appeared to require it But wherever the Charter does not otherwise specify the High Court will use powers and administer the jurisprudence appertaining to those Courts respectively to whose authority it now succeeds

(a) The Letters Patent, dated the 14th May 1862, forwarded with this despatch were afterwards revoked by further Letters Patent dated the 14th December 1863 for which see post.

Despatch from Secretary of State

5 But the Charter is intended positively to declare all such Civil Criminal and other jurisdictions above specified as the Crown thinks proper by this Charter to be on it supplementary or additional to its main purpose namely the fusion of the said Courts

6 Moreover the words giving authority to confer on the Court such jurisdiction and such powers and authorities for the administration of justice as the Crown may direct appear very large and such as in point of fact invest the Crown with extensive powers so far as the administration of justice within the meaning of the sections may require It has been however thought best to use this power very sparingly and simply as ancillary to the real purpose of the Act namely the establishment of new Courts

7 Another reason for the form which the present Letters Patent assume is to be found in the provisions of section 17 of the Act of last Sessions By that section power is given to the Crown to recall the Letters Patent establishing the Court at any time within three years after its establishment and to grant other Letters Patent in their stead This provision was inserted in the Act mainly with the view of enabling Her Majesty's Government to avail themselves of the advice and assistance of the Judges of the Court in framing the more perfect Charter by which the jurisdiction and authority of the Court is to be permanently fixed On this point I request you will put yourselves in communication with the Judges of the Court and at any time previous to the expiration of three years from the date of establishment of the Court furnish me with any suggestions they make or any amendments they may propose in the Letters Patent now transmitted and I shall be glad if in proposing alterations the Judges will put their recommendations as nearly as possible in the form in which they wish them to appear in the new Letters Patent

8 I proceed to notice in order such of the provisions of the Charter as appear to me to call for special remark

9 By clause 6 power is given to the Chief Justice to appoint the officers of the Court and to fix their salaries subject however in his cases to the approval and confirmation of the Government in Council This provision does not refer to the setting of fees where fees are allowed which under section 15 of the Act is required to be done by the Court

10 The Supreme Court exercises an authority entirely independent of the Government in regard to its ministerial officers The Government however have considered itself at liberty to receive representations from any of the officers of the Subordinate Courts who felt themselves aggrieved by the orders of the Judicial Authorities and to express its opinion on the propriety or otherwise of the proceedings of the Courts in such cases It will be expedient for you to take the question into consideration and after communication with the Court to adopt some rule in regard to it which of course must be uniformly applicable to all the officers of the Court constituted as the High Court will be it will merit all the confidence you can repose in it but as a question of policy the extension of the liberty of application to the Government to those who have not hitherto enjoyed it appears to me preferable to taking it away from those who have heretofore been permitted to avail themselves of it as a mode of obtaining redress against proceedings alleged by the applicants to be unjust and oppressive

- 11 In regard to the admission of Advocates Vakeels and Attorneys the recommendations of the Law Commissioners have been followed

Clause 7 10

Under the existing practice the Advocate pleads and the Attorney acts for the suitors of the Supreme Court and the Vakeel both pleads and acts for the suitors of the Sudder Court of which Court the Advocate and Attorney of the Supreme Court are ex officio Vakeels. The terms are employed in the Charter simply to express the functions of these several classes of practitioners. The Advocate and Attorney will respectively plead and act in the High Court and the Vakeel will both plead and act in the High Court as he did in the Sudder Court. Any person may apply to be admitted either as an Advocate or Vakeel or Attorney under the rules which the Court is authorised by the Charter to make and there is nothing in the Charter to prevent the admission of Advocates and Attorneys to be also Vakeels of the High Court should the Judges consider such a course to be expedient.

12 The provisions in the Act section 2 clause 4 which declares that Pleaders of the Sudder Court who shall have been admitted as Pleaders of the High Court shall be eligible under certain condition to the Bench of the Court implies that a discretionary power may be exercised as to the admission of the present Pleaders of the Sudder Court to the Bar of the High Court. This enactment will account to you for the omission from the Charter of any provision appointing all the present practitioners of the Supreme and Sudder Courts to the High Court. I conclude however that unless in any special case there are strong reasons to the contrary the Court will admit the whole of the practitioners in the abolished Courts at the date of their abolition to be the first Advocates Vakeels and Attorneys of the High Court.

- 13 With reference to the concluding sentence of clause 10 it is to be observed that the Letters Patent contain no provision reserving to the Attorneys of the present Supreme Court the right of pleading after the issue of this Charter in the Insolvent Court as newly regulated by clause 17. No such provision however is necessary as the Insolvent Court is a separate tribunal not affected by the Act authorising the Letters Patent and will continue a separate Court though for the future presided over by a Judge of the High Court. The Attorneys therefore will as heretofore practise in accordance with the rules of the Insolvent Court itself.

14 By the important provisions contained in the clauses of the Charter 11 to 34 inclusive effect is given to the 9th section of the Act respecting the jurisdictions and powers to be exercised by the High Court.

- 15 The original civil jurisdiction now exercised by the Supreme Court within the limits of the Presidency Town will henceforth be exercised under the Charter by the High Court including its term (Clause 36 of the Charter) a Judge or Divisional Judge of the High Court appointed or constituted under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act.

Civil Jurisdiction
Clause 11

16 As it is very desirable that every suit should be instituted in the Court district in which the property forming the subject of dispute is situated or in which the cause of action has its origin or in which the defendant resides or carries on business the jurisdiction hitherto exercised by the Supreme Court (on the ground of inhabitancy or otherwise) over persons and property beyond the local authority of the High Court has not been vested in the High Court.

Despatch from Secretary of State

provision of clause 11 provides that the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court shall be confined to the local limits of the Presidency Town, with power however to the Court under clause 13 to call for and try any suit instituted in a district subject to its superintendence when for reasons to be recorded it shall think proper to do so

17 The terms of clause 12 defining the original jurisdiction of the High Court as to suits are nearly similar to those employed in section 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859) and are intended to include every description of case over which the Mofussil Courts have jurisdiction By the 8th section of the 21st George III C 10 the Supreme Court is precluded from exercising any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue Further a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council pronounced in April 1874 ruled against the exercise of the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in matters matrimonial between others than Christians and even expressed some hesitation as to whether that Court should administer a remedy in such cases on the Civil side It is one object of the present Charter to do away with all such restrictions and limitations as far as this can be done without trenching on the proper province of legislation It has therefore been sought to invest the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction with as ample powers in receiving and determining cases of every description and in applying a remedy to every wrong as are exercised by the Courts not established by Royal Charter and thus to place the Courts of first instance in the Presidency Towns and in the interior of the country in this respect as nearly as may be on the same footing

18 I shall be glad to be furnished with your opinion after consultation with the Judges of the Courts as to the concluding portion of clause 12 excluding the jurisdiction of the Court in regard to cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta in which the debt or damage or value of the property sued for does not exceed 100 Rupees Hitherto I believe there has been no tendency to bring into the Supreme Court cases cognizable by the Small Cause Court but should it appear that under the new system the time of the High Court is unnecessarily taken up with trying cases which might be instituted in the Small Cause Court it may become a question for consideration whether the sum excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court might not be raised to say 300 or 500 Rupees

19 It has been suggested that the Small Cause Court should be placed on the same footing as a Zillah Court in its subjection to the High Court as a Court of appeal and general superintendence But I do not consider that it was the purpose of the 8th of Parliament of last Session that the Crown in framing a Charter under it for the High Court should interfere with the present position and jurisdiction of other established Courts This subject if desirable is properly to be attained by legislative enactment I am of opinion that the Small Cause Court ought to be placed in the same relation to the High Court as any other Court subject to its appellate jurisdiction and general control the measure can be carried into effect by an Act of the Governor General in Council

20 As already observed the effect of clause 12 will be to confine the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court within narrow limits than the civil jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court By Clause 13 however the High Court is empowered to call for and to try as a Court of first instance any suit which the law requires to be instituted before some other tribunal. By the exercise of the power thus conferred on it the High Court will be enabled to obviate all reasonable ground of complaint when it shall deem that any hardship or injustice is likely to result from the compulsory institution in a Zillah Court of a suit which but for the change in the system might have been instituted in the Supreme Court.

21 The introduction of the words whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William in this and in several other clauses may appear to require explanation. The Court about to be established is called in section 2 of the Act 24 and 25 Victoria C 101 a Court for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William. That title is of course preserved in the Charter. By sec 8 the Supreme and Sudder Courts are abolished and by section 9 all their jurisdiction power and authority except when otherwise provided are vested in the High Court. But the Supreme Court has various original jurisdiction extending over the whole of the Presidency of Fort William and also over some of the Non Regulation Provinces under the Government of India and the Sudder Court has various appellate jurisdictions extending over the Bengal Division of the Presidency and also over the Province of Assam and others which are not properly parts of the Presidency. The result is that the High Court for the Bengal Division succeeding to the powers of both the Supreme and the Sudder Courts has in several respects jurisdictions in territories not within the Bengal Division. As this is the result of the Act it might not have been necessary to notice it in the Charter. But for the sake of clearness and in order to show distinctly that the Charter is meant to apply to these extra local jurisdiction as well as to the strictly local jurisdiction within the Bengal Division it has been deemed advisable to introduce these words.

22 Clauses 14 and 15 give effect to the recommendation of the law Commissioners that the High Court shall have all the appellate jurisdiction which is now exercised by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut and a new appellate jurisdiction and civil cases from the Courts of original jurisdiction constituted by one or more of its own Judges except that in the case of a decision which has been passed by a majority of the full number of the judges of the Court the appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council.

23 It will appear from a subsequent clause of the Letters Patent that the proceedings in the High Court in civil cases are to be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Legislature of India of which Act VIII of 1861 forms a part. By section 23 of the last mentioned Indian Act provision has been made for a difference of opinion on the hearing of an appeal. A difficulty however may occur when two Judges constituting a Division Court for the trial of cases in the exercise of original jurisdiction differ as to the judgment to be given. For such a case the Code of Civil Procedure which is adapted to Courts of first instance presided over by single Judges only contain no provision. To call in a third Judge and to re try the case with a view to a judgment from which there may be an appeal to the High Court under clause 14 would be productive of unnecessary delay and expense to the parties and I am of opinion that the Court should make provision for such a contingency by a rule made under the 13th section of the Act of Parliament providing either that the judgment shall be in accordance with the opinion of the senior of the Judges constituting the Division Court or that the final judgment shall be entered pro forma according to such opinion such judgment being a judgment for the purpose of an appeal against the same but not for any other purpose.

Despatch from Secretary of State

24 The substantive civil law to be administered by the High Court in the Clauses 18 19 and 20 Jurisdiction of the Supreme and Sudder Court respectively will until otherwise provided continue as at present. As as I have said it was no part of the purpose of the Act of Parliament to effect a Charter to effect And the clauses on which I am now commenting are purely superfluous But they have been introduced to obviate any apprehension which might have been entertained that in fusing the two Courts together it was intended to fuse also the law which they have respectively hitherto administered and thus to make a substantial innovation not only in the tribunals for administration of the law of the law itself I trust however that measures may be taken, ere long for effecting improvements in this respect by enacting for the British possessions in India a new substantive law by which all classes shall be governed and all transactions shall be regulated except in cases to which our Judicatures are required to apply the personal law of any classes of our Indian subjects

25 Under clauses 21 22 and 38 no change will be effected by the Charter
 Clauses 10 and 33 the administration of criminal justice in the Presidency
 Town or in respect of persons subject to its criminal jurisdiction residing in the interior of the country It appears however to His Majesty's Government that some modification of the existing practice both in the capital and in the provinces is necessary and on these points I shall address you a separate despatch

26 The Sudder Court exercises no original jurisdiction but by clause 20 Clause 23 original criminal jurisdiction throughout the territories subject to its authority has been given to the High Court, the principal object being to enable the Judges to hold trials for offences committed in the Presidency Town at which from their importance or for other specific cause it may be expedient that a Judge or Judges of the High Court should preside

27 The remaining clauses of the Letters Patent on the subject of the criminal Clauses 24 25 jurisdiction of the High Court do not call for any particular notice They contain no special provisions respecting the transfer to that Court of the criminal jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court in inhabitants of such parts of India as are not comprised within the local limits of the Letters Patent that having been fully provided for by section 10 of the Act under the authority of which the High Court is established

28 As in the case of the Small Cause Court you will consult the Judges in regard to the relation in which the High Court is to stand to the Magistrates of Calcutta

29 Clause 30 respecting the exercise of the jurisdiction by the High Court Clause 30 where than at its ordinary place of sitting is a very important provision and one which I have no doubt will be judiciously carried into effect will materially tend to the greater efficiency of all the judicatures subject to the superintendence and authority of the High Court Circumstances may frequently arise when the deputation of a Judge or Judges of the High Court would be a measure of the highest expediency For by means the clause under consideration will enable the Government to provide for the one or more Judges from the High Court who would avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them of making a searching inquiry into the manner in which the local Courts were performing their duties

Despatch from Secretary

30 With reference to this clause it has been considered whether the precedence of section 14 of the Act of Parliament should not be followed and the authority to make the necessary arrangement for exercise of the Court's jurisdiction out of the usual place of sitting vested in the Chief Justice. On the whole it was thought that acts partaking so much of an administrative character might be more perfectly performed by the Governor General in Council. But it is scarcely for me to add that Her Majesty's Government entertain full confidence that the Chief Justice will be the authority habitually consulted in the matter.

31 The Supreme Court exercises at present Admiralty Jurisdiction under its Charter. The Chief Justice has Vice Admiralty Jurisdiction under the commission of the 19th July 1822 and all or any of the Judges of the Supreme Court may be appointed Commissioners under the provisions of 39 and 40 George III C 9 section 25 for the trial and adjudication of prize causes and other maritime questions arising in India. By the present Charter the whole of the jurisdictions and power will be vested in the High Court and as in the Act above cited by the expression "other maritime questions" in general mention is made of all the jurisdictions conferred as above mentioned in the clauses of the Charter providing both for the civil and criminal maritime jurisdiction of the High Court.

Clauses 31 and 32

32 The clauses respecting testamentary and intestate jurisdiction do not call for any remark.

33 Her Majesty's Government are desirous of placing the Christian subjects of the Crown within the Presidency in the same position under the High Court as to matters matrimonial in general as they now are under the Supreme Court and this they believe to be effected by clause 35 of the Charter. But they consider it expedient that the High Court should possess in addition the power of decreeing divorce which the Supreme Court does not possess in other words that the High Court should have the same jurisdiction as the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England established in virtue of 20 and 21 Vic C 85 and in regard to which further provisions were made by 22 and 31 Vic C 61 and 23 and 24 Vic C 144. The Act of Parliament for establishing the High Court however does not purport to give to the Crown the power of importing into the Charter all the provisions of the Divorce Court Act and some of them the Crown clearly could not so import such for instance as those which prescribe the period of remarriage or those which exempt from punishment clergymen refusing to re-marry adulterers. All these are in truth matters for Indian legislation and I request that you will immediately take the subject into your consideration and introduce into your Council a Bill for conferring upon the High Court the jurisdiction and powers of the Divorce Court in England one of the provisions of which should be to give an appeal to the Privy Council in those cases in which the Divorce Court Act gives an appeal to the House of Lords.

34 The object of the proviso at the end of clause 35 is to obviate any doubt that may possibly arise as to whether by vesting the High Court with the powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England it was intended to take away from the Courts within the divisions of the Presidency not established by Royal Charter any jurisdiction which they might have in matters Matrimonial as for instance in a suit for alimony between Armenians or Native Christians. With any such jurisdiction it is not intended to interfere.

Despatch from Secretary of State

35 Clause 36 refers to the powers of single Judges and Division Courts appointed or constituted under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act. By section 14 of the Act the power of determining from time to time what Judge in each case shall sit alone and what Judges shall constitute Division Courts is placed in the hands of the Chief Justice. It will be observed that the law does not require that a Judge selected from the Panel shall necessarily form a part of every Division Court and it will be for the Chief Justice to consider whether in cases exclusively between natives it will not be desirable to follow as far as possible the course which has already been resolved upon in regard to the cases under appeal to the Sudder Court at the time of its abolition and to constitute the Division Court of Judges trained in the country whose knowledge of the Native language will obviate the expense and delay of translating the proceedings.

36 Clause 37 is a very important one and there is little doubt will prove a very salutary provision. It has therefore been inserted, although the change introduced is somewhat greater and more substantial than is generally aimed at in this Charter. It extends to the High Court the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Legislature of India for the Court not established by Royal Charter and thus accomplishes the object so far contemplated of substituting one simple Code of Procedure for the various systems (corresponding to its common law equity and admiralty jurisdiction) which have been in operation in the Supreme Court since the date of its establishment.

37 In regard to the rules respecting appeals to the Privy Council the object has been to avoid unnecessary innovation where so much of change with its necessary inconvenience is unavoidable. The existing rules which regulate these appeals are therefore left in force with one or two additions only which experience in the Court of the Judicial Committee has found advisable. For instance clause 40 is introduced, as it had been commonly introduced of late years in the appeal rules of other dependencies of Great Britain in order to remove all doubts as to the power of the High Courts to allow an appeal to the Council from interlocutory judgments.

38 It will however be obvious to you that the rules as now framed will be liable to the reproach of confusion and perhaps of uncertainty. They will be compounded of those contained in the Charter and those already in force which will necessitate reference to several documents. You will agree with me that a simple and intelligible Code of Rules to regulate appeals to the Privy Council from the new High Courts or rather from the High Courts in general which may be constituted under the Act of Parliament will be of great advantage to the suitors and the public. I should wish therefore that one of the first objects of the Judges as soon as the amount of labour thrown on them by their new position may allow it might be to prepare suggestions for such a Code of Rules which might then be reduced into a complete shape by the authority of the Privy Council at Home.

39 In forwarding the Letters Patent to the Judges of the High Court you are requested to furnish them with a copy of this despatch. I trust that the Letters Patent taken in connection with the Act for establishing the Court will be found to contain everything requisite for enabling the Court to proceed at once to the discharge of its important duties. It is possible that omissions may be discovered by the local authorities in India which may impede the proper action of the Courts and should the Judges represent to you that such is the case you will take immediate steps for supplying what is wanting by such legislative measures as you may consider most expedient for remedying the defects brought under your consideration.

Despatch from Secretary of 40 I cannot conclude this despatch without expressing the deep interest felt by Her Majesty's Government in the success of this important measure. The Crown by its Letters Patent has sanctioned the establishment of a tribunal as the Chief Court of Justice in India which in the trained learning of the Judges selected from the Bar and in the knowledge of the language feelings and habits of the Natives of that country possessed by the other members of the Court combines the most material elements of success. And Her Majesty's Government look with confidence to the zealous exertions and cordial co-operation of the Judges to place the administration of Justice in India under the controlling authority of the Court in such a state of efficiency as will render it in every respect adequate to its ends and satisfactory to the people and to the Government.

I have the honour to be

My Lord

Your Lordship's most obedient humble Servant

Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court

Local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court

11. And We hereby ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have and exercise ordinary original civil jurisdiction within such local limits as may, from time to time, be declared and prescribed by any law made by competent legislative authority for India and until some local limits shall be so declared and prescribed within the limit declared and prescribed by the proclamation fixing the limits of Calcutta issued by the Governor-General in Council, on the 10th day of September, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and ninety four and the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said High Court shall not extend beyond the limits for the time being declared and prescribed as the local limits of such jurisdiction (k)

Local limits—Power is given by s 109 of the Government of India Act to the Governor General in Council to alter the local limits of the jurisdiction of High Courts

Issue of warrant.—The High Court has no power in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction to issue a warrant against the person of a judgment debtor and appoint a special bailiff to execute it against the judgment-debtor wherever he might be found in the Presidency (l). Such an order however may be made for the arrest of a defendant who has been guilty of a contempt of Court (m). The reason is that an order for attachment for contempt is not an order made in exercise of the High Court's civil jurisdiction (n).

12. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive try, and determine suits of every description, if, in the case of suits for land or other immovable property, such land or property shall be situated, or, in all other cases, if the cause of action shall have arisen either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell or carry on business, or personally work for gain, within such limits, except that the said High Court shall not have such original jurisdiction in cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court at Calcutta in which the debt or damage, or value of the property sued for does not exceed one hundred rupees

Scope of the clause—Barring certain suits specified at the end of this clause the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay are empowered to try the following suits in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction namely—

I Suits for land or other immovable property—

- (a) if the land or property is situated wholly within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said High Courts or
- (b) where the land or property is situated in part only within the said limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained (c) See notes below Suit for land of which a part is within jurisdiction

II Suits other than those for land—

- (a) if the cause of action has arisen wholly within the said limits or
- (b) where the cause of action has arisen in part only within the said limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained or
- (c) if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain within such limits

Suits for land or other immovable property.—The High Court of Calcutta has held that a suit for land within the meaning of this clause is a suit substantially for land that is for the purpose of acquiring title to or possession of land (p) or for declaring an interest in land (q) I agrees in Calcutta to sell to B land situated outside the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court If A fails to perform his contract and B sues A for specific performance the suit is one for land and it will not be entertained by the Court the land being situated outside its jurisdiction. But if B fails to perform his contract and I sues B for specific performance the suit is not one for land, and hence the suit will lie in the Calcutta Court (r) Similarly a suit by a mortgagee for specific performance of an agreement to execute a mortgage of land is a suit for land and it will not be entertained by the Calcutta Court if the land is situated beyond the original jurisdiction of the Court (s) And it has been laid down by the same High Court that suits for redemption or foreclosure or for sale of mortgage property are all suits for land, and they will not be entertained by that Court if the land is situated beyond its or its jurisdiction (f) also that a suit by a lessee for a declaration that a lease was a sub-lease and for rents and profits is a suit for land, and it will not be entertained if the land is situated beyond its jurisdiction (u) A suit for a share in the sale proceeds of land without jurisdiction is not a suit for land (v) Page J in the case last cited said that the term suits for land or other immovable property means suits in which having regard to the issues raised in the pleadings the decree or order will affect directly the proprietary or possessory title to land or other immovable property The learned Judge observed that this construction conformed to the rule that questions relating to title or ownership of land should be determined not only by the lex situs but also in the forum situs In short the Calcutta High Court would appear to hold that suits of the kind mentioned in cls (a) to (e) of s 16 of the Code are all suits for land (w) The same view was taken until recently by the Madras High Court (x) In Vellappa Chettiar v Govinda Dass (y) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that a suit by a purchaser of land situate outside Madras for specific performance of a contract to sell made in Madras against the vendor who resides in Madras is not a suit for land and is cognisable by the High Court of Madras In the view taken by Courts Trotter C J a suit in which the plaintiff asks for a decree which if passed, would compel the defendant to do or abstain from doing something which the Court orders him to do would not be a suit for land but a suit in which a plaintiff asks for a decree which if passed would bring about proprio vigore an immediate change in the ownership of property would be a suit for land (z) Thus a suit for maintenance in which the plaintiff prays that the amount may be charged on specific land is a suit for land for if a charge is created by the decree it can be enforced by a sale of the land (a)

The High Court of Bombay gives a very restricted meaning to the expression suit for land Sir Charles Sargent in Holkar v Dadabhai (b) held that the Court had jurisdiction to try a suit for specific performance of an agreement to execute a mortgage made in Bombay of land situate outside the original jurisdiction. The ratio decidendi was that the expression suit for land was intended to exclude from the Court's jurisdiction only such suits relating to land as if brought in England, the Courts would refuse to entertain on the ground that the land was situate abroad. This case was followed, though sometimes with evident reluctance for many years Farren C J in an unreported case (c) passed a foreclosure decree on a mortgage of land outside jurisdiction, and this was followed by Strachey J in Sorabji v Ruttonji (d) In Hunraj v Bhachordas (e) a purchaser a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell land situate beyond the local limits of jurisdiction was entertained although the prayer was that the defendant be ordered upon making out a marketable title to execute a conveyance thereof to the plaintiff In Venkatras v Ahimji (f) a suit for sale was decreed on a mortgage of land outside jurisdiction and Scott C J said that such a suit was not a suit for land as it was not a suit to obtain land or to obtain a declaration of title to land or to obtain damages for interference with land. This case was followed by much hesitation by Shah J and Jasraj v Akubai (g) which was also a suit for sale by a mortgagee. On the other hand Jenkins C J in Vaghoji v Camaj (h) correctly summarised the principles on which the Courts in England exercise jurisdiction in suits relating to land abroad and refused to make a declaration of title to land outside jurisdiction. This was followed in Pranlal v Goculdas (i) where Pratt J held that the Court had no jurisdiction to make a declaration as to which of two mortgages of land outside jurisdiction had priority. In Yesudabai v Janardhan (j) Fawcett J held that a suit by a wife praying that her maintenance be secured by a charge on her husband's immovable property in Bombay was a suit for land. The same learned Judge in Rajah Kotakal v Malabar Timber Co (k) said that if the land is outside jurisdiction a suit to declare a charge on it is not a suit for land but resided from this opinion in his judgment in Hatimkhas v Framroz (l).

Now as explained by Jenkins C J in Vaghoji v Camaj (m) the Courts in England do not entertain suits for land outside jurisdiction unless (1) the defendant is in England and (2) there is some privity between the parties on the ground of contract trust or fraud. The defendant in Holkar's case did not reside or carry on business in Bombay and this fact appears to have been overlooked in the judgment. The case was adversely criticized on this ground in previous editions of this commentary and that criticism was entirely accepted by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in India Spinning and Weaving Co v Climax Syndicate (n). In that case the plaintiff mortgagees had filed a suit against the defendant mortgagor who resided out of jurisdiction asking for the sale of the mortgaged properties which were also outside jurisdiction. The mortgage had been executed in Bombay and though curiously enough the judgment does not refer to this fact that was the circumstance which brought the case within Holkar v Dadabhai. Nevertheless the Court overruling Holkar v Dadabhai said the suit was not competent. The Court entirely agreed with the Calcutta decisions and quoted with approval the dictum of Jenkins C J in Sudamdih Coal Co v Empire Coal Co (o) that regard must be had to the substance of the suit in deciding whether it was a suit for land.

But the Bombay High Court has again changed its mind in Hatimkhas v Framroz (p) a Full Bench has held that a suit by a mortgagee to enforce his mortgage by sale of the land mortgaged is not a suit for land and that if the mortgagor lives within jurisdiction the High Court can entertain the suit even though the land is wholly outside the limits of its original civil jurisdiction. The judgment does not proceed on the equitable jurisdiction wrongly claimed in Holkar's case but rests on two main grounds (1) that a suit for sale on a mortgage is a suit in personam to recover a debt and (2) that suits for land are suits the primary object of which is to obtain a declaration of title to or possession of land. This view is inconsistent with the definition of mortgage in sec 53 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882. The same High Court has held (q) following Hatimkhas's case and dissenting from Pranlal v Goculdas (r) that the High Court has jurisdiction in a suit brought by an equitable mortgagee against the mortgagor for lands situate outside Bombay to impound a legal mortgage residing out of Bombay and alleging a prior legal mortgage in his favour provided the legal mortgage is executed in Bombay.

Cl 12

Suits for the partition of land and suits for a declaration of title to land are suits for land and will not be entertained if the land is outside jurisdiction (a) A suit for damages for trespass to land is a suit for land (b) Suits for the recovery of title deeds are according to the Calcutta High Court not suits for land (u) but the Bombay High Court has held that they are if a question of title to land is involved (v) This seems incorrect for as said in India Spinning and Weaving Co v Climax Syndicate (w) it is difficult to see how a suit to recover title deeds can be beyond the jurisdiction of the Court if the defendant is within the jurisdiction

The Bombay High Court has held that an administration suit is not a suit for land although there are immovable properties alleged to belong to the estate of the deceased beyond jurisdiction and the High Court therefore can entertain such a suit and determine the question whether they belonged to the deceased at the time of his death. If the suit is otherwise within jurisdiction no leave under cl. 12 is necessary merely because the immovable properties or some of them are situated beyond jurisdiction (x) The High Court of Calcutta has held that a suit for administration, and as incidental to that suit for a declaration that certain leases granted by the executors of the estate cannot stand as against the plaintiff (the beneficiary) is not a suit for land (y). In a Privy Council case where a suit was brought by three out of four executors against the fourth executor for his removal from the office of trustee and executor and for accounts of the assets of the deceased and for administration of his estate it was held that the suit was not one for land, and that the High Court of Madras had jurisdiction to entertain the suit though the property left by the deceased was outside jurisdiction as a part of the cause of action had arisen within the jurisdiction, and the defendant was dwelling in Madras at the time of the institution of the suit (z). In a Calcutta case it was held that the High Court may entertain a suit by an executor for a declaration and injunction (though not for possession) in respect of the estate of the testator consisting of several immovable properties provided one at least of the properties is situated within its original jurisdiction and leave of the Court is obtained it is not necessary that the cause of action should arise within the local limits or be specifically with reference to that property which is situated within those limits (a)

Every suit which has any reference to land is not a suit for land (b) In La J Mortgage Bank v Sudurudeen Ahmed Trevelyan, J said I decline to hold that wherever land has anything to do with a suit it is therefore a suit for land (c) Thus a suit by a trustee against his co trustees to enforce his right under a deed of trust jointly with the defendants as shabait and manager of lands dedicated to an idol in which neither the plaintiff nor the defendants have any beneficial interest is not a suit for land and may be entertained by the High Court though the lands may be situated outside jurisdiction (d) So a suit for an account and dissolution of partnership is not a suit for land for land because one asset of the partnership happens to be a tea garden situate in the mufassal (e)

All other cases —suits for partition of movable and immovable property the latter being situated wholly outside jurisdiction—The words all other cases in this clause do not include cases of suits for immovable plus movable property. They refer to cases in which immovable property is not involved. Hence if A sues B for partition of movable and immovable property and the immovable property is situated wholly outside jurisdiction the suit must be dismissed as to such property even if the leave of the Court has been obtained. This is because the immovable property being situated wholly outside jurisdiction the Court has no power to grant leave to sue as regards such property (f). In such a case the plaint may be amended with the leave of the Court by omitting paragraphs which relate to immovable property and the suit may be proceeded with so far as it relates to movable property (g).

Suit for land of which part is within jurisdiction—Where there are several immovable properties then if even one of them is situated within jurisdiction the Court can entertain a suit for a partition of all the properties including those situated outside jurisdiction provided the leave of the Court has been first obtained. Such a case comes within the following words of cl 12 namely the said High Court shall be empowered to determine suits of every description if in the case of suits for land, such land shall be situated either wholly or in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained in part within the local limits (h). But in Malimbhas v Framro (i) some of the Judges were of opinion that the condition as to leave of the Court did not apply to suits for land where some part of the land was situate outside jurisdiction. If some of the properties are situated within and some outside jurisdiction but no leave is obtained the Court can proceed only with the suit so far as it relates to the immovable properties situated within jurisdiction (j). Similarly if some of the properties included in a deed of mortgage are within and some outside the jurisdiction the Court has jurisdiction on leave to sue being obtained to entertain a suit on the mortgage in respect of all the properties including those situated outside jurisdiction (k) but not if the properties outside jurisdiction are the subject of a separate mortgage (l). The same rules apply where some of the properties are situated in British India and some outside British India (m). See notes above scope of the clause.

Leave of Court—The leave under this clause is a condition precedent to jurisdiction so that unless the condition is fulfilled by obtaining the necessary leave to sue the Court will have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit (n). Such leave affords the very foundation of the jurisdiction hence it must be obtained before the institution of the suit it cannot be granted after the suit has been instituted. The leave granted is confined to the cause or causes of action set forth in the plaint at the time when the leave was granted hence the plaint cannot be amended so as to alter the cause of action (o). ## Let Pat (Cal, Bom, and Mad)

CI 12 if the cause of action is not altered there is no objection to an amendment (p) If a suit is brought in a Chartered High Court with leave of the Court but there is nothing on the face of the plaint to show that any part of the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction, the plaintiff may be allowed to prove by evidence that part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction and if it is necessary to amend the plaint by adding a statement that part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction the amendment may be allowed for such an amendment does not alter or add to the original cause of action (q). Where a defendant who does not reside within the jurisdiction and against whom the cause of action has arisen in part only within the jurisdiction is added after the institution of the suit leave under this clause must be obtained at the time of the application for adding him as a party though leave was obtained when the suit was originally filed (r). The force of an order granting leave to institute a suit is exhausted when the suit is instituted in pursuance of the order. Hence if the suit is withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit upon the same cause of action and a fresh suit is brought there is nothing to prevent the Court from granting fresh leave to institute the fresh suit (s).

The leave under this section must be distinctly applied for and obtained. It cannot be implied from the fact that the plaintiff was granted leave to sue as a pauper (t) or from the fact that a defendant is added who does not reside within the jurisdiction (u). Nor can it be presumed from the fact that the Court orders a third party notice to be served on a party resident outside its jurisdiction. The defendant taking out such notice must apply for leave under Clause 12 and the leave must be endorsed on the notice as it is on a plaint (v). The granting of leave under this clause is discretionary (w).

Cause of action—See notes to s. 20 of the Code. Cause of action, Cause of action in suit on contracts and Cause of action in other suits above.

If the cause of action shall have arisen in part.—It has been said in two Bombay cases that the words if the cause of action shall have arisen in part refer to a material part of the cause of action (x). There is nothing in the language of this clause to warrant such a construction though the Court may in the exercise of its discretion refuse to grant leave to sue if a material part of the cause of action did not arise within its jurisdiction. The High Court of Madras has held that in dealing with applications for leave to sue under this clause the Court is not precluded from taking the question of convenience into consideration (y).

For other cases see notes to s. 20 of the Code. Cause of action in suits on contracts, and Cause of action in other suits above.

Defendant—The word defendant in this clause means all the defendants where there are two or more defendants to a suit. It is not sufficient that one of the defendants dwells or carries on business within the jurisdiction (z).

Jurisdiction over non resident foreigners—See notes to s. 20 of the Code. Suits against non resident foreigners above.

The question whether the fact of carrying on business through an agent within the local limits of jurisdiction would give the Court jurisdiction over a non resident foreigner

Suits of every description—This expression has been held to confer upon the Court matrimonial jurisdiction over Jews (c)

Ordinary jurisdiction—The ordinary jurisdiction of the High Court embraces all such as is exercised in the ordinary course of law and without any special occasion or special order being necessary therefor (d)

Appeal—The leave under this clause is granted on an ex parte application. If an order is made granting leave the defendant may apply to have the order set aside or he may wait until the hearing or the legality of the order may be called in question as a separate issue for trial at the hearing of the suit (e). If the defendant does not wait until the hearing and applies to have the order granting the leave set aside and if the application is rejected he may appeal from the order rejecting the application (f). Similarly if the plaintiff applies for leave and leave is refused the plaintiff may appeal from the order (g). The appeal would be one under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent.

The order granting or refusing leave by one Judge cannot be superseded by another Judge except on appeal from the order (h)

Waiver—There are two classes of cases to be considered under this head, namely:—

- (1) where the plaintiff in his plaint alleges that part of the cause of action arose outside the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction and fails to obtain leave and the case comes on for trial
- (2) where the plaintiff in his plaint alleges that the whole cause of action arose within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction but it turns out at the trial that part of the cause of action arose within and part outside the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

In case (1) the defendant may by appearing and pleading waive the objection to the jurisdiction. Thus it was held by the High Court of Calcutta (5) following Moore v Gamgee (7) in a case where the plaintiff alleged in his plaint that part of the cause of action had arisen within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction but no leave was obtained by the plaintiff under clause 1, and the defendant without raising any objection to the jurisdiction filed his written statement and applied subsequently for a commission to examine witnesses that the defendant had waived his objection to the jurisdiction. The decisions proceeded on the ground that the absence of leave under

The power of transfer contained in sec. 15 of the Charter Act has nothing to do with the power of removal conferred by the present clause and the Letters Patent make superintendence not appellate jurisdiction the condition of the exercise of the power of removal conferred by this clause. It has accordingly been held that the Court of the Political Resident at Aden being a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court of Bombay within the meaning of the present clause the High Court of Bombay has power to remove a suit from that Court to itself for trial and determination on though the Aden Court is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court (q).

Let. Pat [Cal, Bom, and Mad]

Cls 14, 15 Joinder of several causes of action—The word several means separate. Under this clause it is necessary that one cause of action at least should arise within the original jurisdiction of the High Court ( ) Where a suit is founded upon two causes of action one of which is alleged to have arisen partly within the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court and the other wholly outside the jurisdiction the High Court has power after granting leave to sue in respect of the former cause of action and release 12 to allow the plaintiff to join the latter in the same suit There is nothing in the present clause to show that the power of the Court to make such an order under this clause is limited to cases where one of the causes of action has arisen wholly within the jurisdiction (a) The jurisdiction of the High Court to pass an order under this clause in regard to joinder of cause of action is not taken away by the plea of want of jurisdiction which the defendant may raise in respect of a cause of action so joined (b)

Such causes of action not being for land—This expression means exclude any cause of action which is for land (c)

15 And We do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal from the judgment (not being a judgment passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Court subject to the superintendence of the said High Court, and not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under the provisions of section 107 of the Government of India Act, or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to section 108 of the Government of India Act, and that notwithstanding anything hereinbefore provided an appeal shall lie to the said High Court from a judgment of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to section 108 of the Government of India Act, made [on or after the first day of February, 1929] in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Court subject to the superintendence of the said High Court, where the Judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal, but that the right of appeal from other judgments of Judges of the said High Court or of such Division Court shall

Amendment—The above clause except the words enclosed in rectangular brackets is clause 10 as amended by the Letters Patent of 1928 which came into force on the date of publication in Calcutta on the 11th January 1928 in Bombay on the 27th January 1928 and in Madras on the 13th January 1928. Clause 10 of the Allahabad Letters Patent clause 13 of the Rangoon Letters Patent clause 10 of the Lahore Letters Patent and clause 10 of the Patna Letters Patent have been similarly amended and they came into force respectively on the 28th January 1928 2nd February 1928 8th February 1928 and 30th January 1928. The previous Letters Patent were as follows—

And We do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal from the judgment (not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under the provisions of section 107 of the Government of India Act 1915 or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court pursuant to section 13 of the said recited Act and that an appeal shall also lie to the said High Court from the judgment (not being a sentence or order as aforesaid) of two or more Judges of the said High Court or of such Division Court whenever such Judges are equally divided in opinion and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the said High Court at the time being but that the right of appeal from other judgments of the Judges of the said High Court or of such Division Court shall be to Us Our heirs or successors in Our or Their Privy Council as hereinafter provided

The effect of the amendments made in 1928 is—

- (1) the exclusion of a right of appeal from a judgment passed by a single Judge sitting in second appeal unless the Judge who passed the judgment grants a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal. There is no question of grant of certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal in the case of two Judges composing a Division Bench differing in opinion (d)
- (2) the exclusion of a right of appeal when the Judges of a Division Bench are equally divided in opinion. This case is provided for by the amendment of clause 36

There is as before an unqualified right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge on the original side

As to amendment no (1) it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that it had no retrospective effect and that it could not apply to suits filed before the amended Letters Patent came into force (e). The clause was therefore again amended by adding the words in rectangular brackets namely on or after the first day of February 1929. The result is that there is no right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge sitting in second appeal in cases where the judgment is pronounced after the 1st February 1929 whatever may be the date when the suit was filed unless a certificate is granted declaring that the case is a fit one for appeal (f)

bearing of "judgment" as used in this clause —

1. Calcutta High Court—The bearing case on the subject is that of The J. & F. I. Co. for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (2) decided by the High Court of Calcutta as far back as 1872. In that case C. J. said: "We think judgment means a decision in which affords the rule of the question between the parties a right or liability. It may be either final or preliminary or interlocutory. The difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole case and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it. Some matters to be determined. This definition is now of some antiquity and has been held to be correct if it has not already become almost classical (1). The principle was laid down in The Justice of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. was this: so as to be liable under this clause from an order directing the issue of a mandamus to the Justice of the Peace for Calcutta to compel them to refer to arbitration a question relating to the gas. The above decision was followed by a decision of the same Court in Haji Imam v. Haji Mahomed (3) where it was held that an appeal lies under this clause from an order refusing to set aside an order granting leave to sue to the plaintiff under the Letters Patent. Referring to the said order C. J. said: "It is not a formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure in the suit but one that has the effect of giving a jurisdiction to the Court which it otherwise would not have. It may fairly be said to determine some right between them as the right to sue in a civil Court and to compel the defendants who are not within its jurisdiction to sue and defend the suit or if they do not to make them liable to have a decree passed against them in their absence. In a later case Carth v. C. J. said: "I think that the word judgment means a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory character which merely decides some isolated point not affecting the result of the entire suit. (4) In a recent case Pankin v. C. J. said: "The mere circumstance that an order puts in peril the finality of a decision given in the regular course does not of itself make that order a judgment (5).

The definition of judgment in the case of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta was adopted by a majority of the same High Court in a later case where it was held that an appeal lies under this clause from an order made by a single Justice of the Court under Order 4, rule 10 refusing to transmit for execution an Order of His Majesty's Council (6). The decision was affirmed on appeal to the Privy Council (7). Referring to the judgment of the majority their Lordships said: "These learned Justices and their Lordships think rightly that whether the transmission of an order under Order 4, rule 10 would or would not be a merely ministerial proceeding for the Justices (8) the case order was appealed from) had in fact exercised a judicial function and hence to a decision of great importance which if it remained would conclude any rights of Habsunleri for an execution in this suit. They held therefore that it was a judgment within the meaning of clause 15. In a later case (9) C. J. said that the definition of judgment given by Couch C. J. had never been so widely as absolutely exhaustive and that in every case where the Court was called upon to decide whether the decision under appeal was or was not a judgment ' Cl regard must be had to the nature of the order (o)

2 Bombay High Court—The definition of judgment as given in the two Calcutta cases cited above has been adopted by the High Court of Bombay. In Miya Mahomed v Zorabi (p) Scott C J referring to the above Calcutta cases said For a considerable number of years in this Court those two decisions (q) have to my knowledge been regarded as the leading decisions to be followed on the question whether an order in any particular case is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The leading Bombay case is Sonbai v Ahmedbhai decided in the year 1872 (r).

3 Madras High Court—Turning now to the Madras decisions the earlier leading case on the subject was De Souza v Coles (s) decided in the year 1868. The modern leading case is that of Tuljaram v Alagappa (t) decided by a Full Bench of that Court in 1910. In the former case Bittlestone J said The word judgment cannot be limited to the final judgment in the suit but must be held to have the more general meaning of any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any suitor or applicant. When the language giving the appeal is so general in its terms as that contained in the 15th clause of the Charter it is we think impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from. This definition has now been rejected as too wide and instead thereof we have another definition of the term judgment laid down in Tuljaram's case. In that case White C J said as follows—

The test seems to me to be not what is the form of the adjudication but what is its effect in the suit or proceeding in which it is made. If its effect whatever its form may be and whatever be the nature of the application on which it is made is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned or if its effect if it is not complied with is to put an end to the suit or proceedings I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause. An adjudication on an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in the suit is not in my opinion a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent. I think too an order on an independent proceeding which is ancillary to the suit (not in title as a step towards judgment but with a view to render the judgment effective if obtained)—e.g. an order on an application for an interim injunction or for the appointment of a receiver is a judgment within the meaning of the clause.

It will be seen that the definition of judgment as stated by White C J is wider than that in Justice of the Peace for Calcutta and narrower than the one in De Souza v Coles. Referring to the former case White C J said that he was not prepared to say as was said in that case that judgment within the meaning of this clause must be a decision which affects the merits by determining some right or liability. The learned Chief Justice said I think the decision may be a judgment for the purposes of the clause though

CI 15 it does not affect the merits of the suit or proceeding and does not determine any question of right raised in the suit or proceeding. The result is that some orders which have been held not to be appealable by the Calcutta High Court have been held to be appealable by the Madras High Court e.g. an order under cl 13 of the Letters Patent transferring a suit from a subordinate Court to the High Court (u). Such an order of transfer is appealable in Madras as it puts an end to the suit as it stood in the Court from which it was transferred while an order refusing a transfer is not appealable as the proceedings are allowed to go on (v). Referring to the definition of judgment in De Souza v Coles the learned Chief Justice said that it was too wide.

1 Allahabad High Court—L P cl (10)—In Allahabad it has been generally held that no order which is appealable under s 104 and O 43 r 1 is appealable under the present clause (w). And further no appellate order from which a second appeal is excluded under section 104 can be appealed from under this clause (x). Conversely an order from which an appeal is allowed under s 104 and O 43 r 1 to the High Court from a subordinate Court is an order from which an appeal will lie under this clause (y). The only definition hitherto given by that Court of the word judgment is that it must be such a judgment on the part of all the learned and honourable Judges who may constitute a Bench as disposes of the suit or the appeal before it (z). See notes to s 104 Letters Patent appeal.

2 Lahore High Court—L P cl (10)—The High Court of Lahore has adopted the definition of judgment as given by White C.J. in Tuljaram's case referred to above under the head Madras High Court (a). In a recent case it was held that the expression judgment in this clause is not synonymous with the word decree as defined in sec 2 of the Code (b).

3 Rangoon High Court—L P cl (13)—In a recent Full Bench case (c) the High Court of Rangoon held that the word judgment in cl 13 of the Letters Patent is intended to cover an order as well as a decree but the effect of the judgment must be such as to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned or if its effect is that it is not complied with is to put an end to the suit or proceeding. If it has this effect the adjudication is a judgment otherwise not. The decision of an issue which has the effect of allowing a suit to proceed does not affect the merits or result of the whole suit in that it does not decide the case one way or another and is therefore not a judgment. The decision of a Judge upon a preliminary issue is not binding on his successor and the Judge himself can change his mind on more mature consideration.

Interlocutory Order—All the High Courts are now agreed that no appeal lies under this clause from an order merely regulating procedure in a suit or from an order

Orders in proceedings other than suits and appeals—A judgment within the meaning of this clause need not be an adjudication in a suit or appeal as technically understood. An adjudication which terminates what may be called an original petition like an application for the custody of a minor may be a judgment so as to be appealable under this clause. The following is a list of such adjudications—

- 1 Habeas corpus—An appeal lies under this clause from an order deciding the claim of relatives to the custody of a minor on a writ of Habeas corpus (1).

Let Pat [Cal, Bom, and Mad]

CI 15

- 2 Leave to sue under cl 12 of the charter—An appeal lies from an order made to set aside an order granting leave to sue under cl 12 of the Letters Patent and also from an order refusing to grant leave to sue. See notes to cl 1 above. Appeal.
- 3 Administrator General's Act 3 of 1913—An appeal lies from an order made to the Administrator General commission at a certain rate (u).
- 4 Probate and Administration Act 1881 s 90 [now Indian Succession Act 1925 s 307]—An appeal lies from an order purporting to be made under s 90 of the Probate and Administration Act at the instance of a beneficiary in a case in which there is no restriction imposed by the will on the power of the executor to sell immovable property forming part of the estate of the deceased. Such an order is really one made without jurisdiction (r). An appeal also lies from an order granting probate (w).
- 5 Limitation Act s 5—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an appeal lies from an order refusing to excuse the delay in filing an appeal or application (x). The High Court of Bombay has held that an appeal does lie from such an order (y).
- 6 Mandamus—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in the Madras case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co ( ) that no appeal lies from an order which directs a mandamus to sue to a public body to compel them to refer a question of compensation to arbitration, the reason given being that such an order does not determine any question whatever between the parties but only initiates proceedings by which the liability of the public body to make compensation is to be ascertained and determined. This decision was dissented from by White CJ in the Madras case of Tuljaram v Ilagappa (a).
- 7 Contempt—An appeal lies from an order of committal for contempt (b) as well as from an order refusing an application to commit for contempt of Court (c).
- 8 Vice Admiralty jurisdiction—An appeal lies from the decision of a single Judge of a Chartered High Court exercising Admiralty or Vice Admiralty jurisdiction (d).
- 9 Arbitration Act 9 of 1893—An appeal lies under this clause from an order refusing to enlarge time for the submission of an award remitted to the umpire (e) or to set aside an award made and filed under the Arbitration Act (f). There is a conflict of opinion whether an order refusing to set aside proceedings under sec 17 of the Arbitration Act is a judgment (h) or not (i) in some cases that it is (g) while in some that it is not (h). An order returning an award under the Arbitration Act for notice of filing to be given to the parties is not a judgment (i).

Cl<sub>s</sub> 15-17

The appeal given to the Full Court under this clause is not confined to the point on which the Judges of the Division Court differ: the whole appeal is open before the Court for decision (x).

Land acquisition appeal—The decision of the High Court in a land acquisition appeal is not a judgment within the meaning of this clause so as to enable a party to file a further appeal to the High Court under this clause (y). See notes to cl. 39. The decision must amount to a judgment, decree or order.

Subject to its superintendence—Note that the words used in s 13 of the Charter Act [now s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915] are subject to its appellate jurisdiction while those in the present sections are subject to its superintendence. (i) Compare cl 13 above.

28 And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall be a Court of reference and revision from the Criminal Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and shall have power to hear and determine all such cases referred to it by the Sessions Judges or by any other Officer now authorized to refer cases to the said High Court, and to revise all such cases tried by any Officer or Court possessing criminal jurisdiction, as are now subject to reference to, or revision, by the said High Court.

Now subject to reference to or revision by the said High Court.—The High Court cannot under this clause revise an order of a Secretary to Government issued under a warrant under the Goondas Act (Bengal Act 1 of 1903) as such Secretary was not an officer possessing criminal jurisdiction in 1862 when the Letters Patent were issued (h).

29 And We do further ordain that the said High Court shall have power to direct the transfer of any criminal case or appeal from any Court to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction and also direct the

Necessaries supplied to a ship—It was settled to be the law in England prior to the passing of 3 and 4 Vict c 65 the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in the case of necessaries supplied to a ship though perhaps it occasionally purport to exercise the jurisdiction where not prohibited (m) The same view has obtained in India (n) but there is a difference of opinion as to whether the extended powers vested in 3 and 4 Vict c 65 and 24 Vict c 10 became vested in the Indian High Court by virtue of the several Letters Patent (o) Assuming that the High Court in its Admiralty jurisdiction had no jurisdiction over claims for maritime necessaries under any previous enactment such jurisdiction would now rest on the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act 1891 which vests in it the power described in sec 5 of the Admiralty Act 1861 [24 Vict c 10]. The effect of the two Acts is to invest the Indian High Courts with jurisdiction over claims for necessaries supplied to a ship elsewhere than in the port to which the ship Court belongs unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that at the time of the institution of the suit the owner is domiciled in British India or Burma (p)

Provided always that nothing therein contained shall be held to interfere with the exercise of any jurisdiction in matters matrimonial by any Court not established by Royal Charter within the said Presidency lawfully possessed thereof

Our subjects professing the Christian religion —The High Court has no jurisdiction under this clause to grant a decree for restitution unless both parties are Christians. It has therefore no jurisdiction under this clause to grant such a decree when the petitioner is a Christian but the respondent is a Parsi. Nor is any such jurisdiction conferred upon it in suits for restitutio of conjugal rights by the Indian Divorce Act 1869 (r). See Indian Divorce Act s 4

Appeals to Privy Council

39 And We do further ordain that any person or persons may appeal to Us, Our heirs and successors in Our or Their Privy Council in any matter not being of criminal jurisdiction from a final judgment, decree or order of the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal made on appeal and from any final judgment, decree, or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the said High Court or of any Division Court, from which an appeal shall not lie to the said High Court under the provisions contained in the 10th clause of these presents. Provided, in either case, that the sum or matter at issue is of the amount or value of not less than Rupees 10,000, or that such judgment, decree, or order shall involve, directly or indirectly, some claim, demand or question to or respecting property amounting to or of the value of not less than Rupees 10,000, or from any other final judgment, decree or order made either on appeal or otherwise aforesaid, when the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for appeal to Us, Our heirs or successors in Our or Their Privy Council. Subject always to such rules and orders as are now in force, or may, from time to time, be made respecting appeals to Ourselves in Council from the Courts of the said Presidency, except so far as the said existing rules and orders respectively are hereby varied, and subject also to such further rules and orders as We may, with the advice of Our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf

Decisions appealable to the Privy Council—No appeal lies to His Majesty in Council under this clause unless—

- (i) the decision from which an appeal is sought to be preferred is a final judgment decree or order
- (ii) the decision is a final one and
- (iii) the decision is passed on appeal or in the exercise of original jurisdiction

The decision must amount to a judgment decree or order — A decree of a High Court in a testamentary matter is appealable to His Majesty in Council if the case is one which if it were an ordinary civil case would fulfill the conditions of sections 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code ( ) But no appeal lies to the Privy Council from an award made by a High Court on appeal from a District Court under s 54 of the Land Acquisition Act 1894 Such an award is not a judgment decree or order within the meaning of this clause (a) Similarly no appeal lies from a decision of the High Court upon a case referred by the Chief Revenue Authority under s 10 of the Income Tax Act 1918 The judgment given on such a reference is merely advisory ( )

The judgment decree or order must be final — See notes to s 109 of the Code under the head Final s 238 above

The final judgment decree or order must be one made on appeal or in the exercise of original jurisdiction — Cl 10 of the Charter empowers the High Court to deal with professional misconduct by suspension or removal An order made under that clause is not in the exercise either of the original or appellate jurisdiction of the High Court and is not therefore appealable to His Majesty in Council ( ) But an order made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under s 10 of the High Courts Act (d) [now s 10<sup>a</sup> of the Government of India Act 1915] or in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Code (e) is appealable to the Privy Council It may here be stated that cl 15 of the Letters Patent was amended by the Amended Letters Patent of 11th March 1919 by adding into the clause certain words which make it clear that no appeal lies to the High Court under that clause from an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction or from an order made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915 But if the order in revision is made by a single Judge section 111 of the Code bars an appeal to the Privy Council (f)

“Made on appeal” — An order made by the High Court rejecting an application to amend a decree passed by that Court on appeal is not an order made on appeal within the meaning of this clause (g) nor is an order made by the High Court rejecting an application to review a judgment passed on appeal (h) Such an order is not an order made on appeal against the judgment sought to be reviewed it is an order in the appeal in which the judgment sought to be reviewed was given ( )

44 And We do further ordain and declare that all the provisions of these Our Letters Patent be subject to the legislative powers of the Governor General in Legislative Council and also of the Governor General in Council under section seventy one of the Government of India Act, 1915, and also of the Governor General in cases of emergency under section seventy two of that Act and may be in all respects amended and altered thereby

Alterations in this clause.—This clause was substituted for the original clause 44 by the Amending Letters Patent of 11th March 1910. The material alteration consists in substituting the words powers of the Governor General in Legislative Council and also of the Governor General in Council for the words powers of the Governor General in Council.

Legislative powers of the Governor General in Council.—The powers of the Governor General in Council to make laws are derived from the Indian Councils Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. c. 67). By sec. 2 of that Act the Governor General in Council is given power to make laws in the manner provided including power to repeal or amend existing laws and including the making of laws for all Courts of justice and for all persons whatever British or Native foreigners or others. But a proviso to that section enacts that there is to be no power to repeal or in any way affect a law passed in the same session of Parliament with the Indian Councils Act. The High Courts Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104) is such an Act and the Governor General in Council therefore has no power to alter its provisions unless such power is expressly given by the Act. Thus the Governor General in Council has no power to alter the provisions of that Act as to the qualifications of the Judges of the High Courts or the provisions of sec. 1 of thereof giving the High Courts superintendence over the Courts which are subject to its appellate jurisdiction (p). But the Governor General in Council has power to remove any place or territory from the jurisdiction of a High Court, the reason being that such power is distinctly recognized by sec. 9 of the said Act and is also consistent with the Letters Patent (cl. 44) as required by the said sec. 9 (p).

Further there is a proviso to sec. 22 of the Indian Councils Act which enacts that there is to be no power to repeal or in any way affect any provision of the Government of India Act of 1858. Sec. 6 of the latter Act provides that all persons shall have the same suits remedies and proceedings against the Secretary of State in Council as they could have done against the East India Company before the commencement of the India Act 1858. A British subject could sue the Secretary of State for his claim to any right over land. The Governor General in Council has no power under the Indian Councils Act to pass an Act taking away the right of a subject to sue the Secretary of State in a Civil Court to determine his claim to any right Cls over land (r) See now the Government of India Act 1915 s 106 (2)

An order made in revision by a single Judge is final since the amendment of cl 15 and would therefore be appealable to Privy Council under cl 39 but as Letters Patent are subject to Imperial Legislation that appeal is taken away by Section 111 of the Code (s)

45 And it is Our further will and pleasure that these Letters Patent shall be published by the Governor General in Council, and shall come into operation from and after the date of such publication, and that from

Provisions of former Let determined by the said Letters Patent of the fourteenth of istent with these Letters Patent, shall cease, determine and

The Lectures are the most exhaustive commentary ever written on the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act and the Provincial Insolvency Act. Except in the case of sections common to both the Acts the two Acts have been separately dealt with in the Lectures.

The Lectures are arranged (except in a few cases) in the order of sections and they constitute a commentary on each section.

The text of both the Acts amended up to date is printed at the end of the Lectures, and below each section reference is given to the paragraphs of the Lectures which constitute the commentary on that section.

INDIAN PENAL CODE

THIS book is prepared specially to meet the needs of the student of law. The comments are first set out shortly with a view to help to a thorough understanding of the principles underlying a given section.

The application of these principles to concrete facts is illustrated by a selection of typical cases decided under the Code. A number of questions are grouped together in the appendix, which will assist the student in testing his progress. The summary which is a special feature of this edition is meant to help the student in revising this subject for his examination.

No better and more reliable text book exists on the subject.
